

Quiet, Spartan Life Lived by George At Vienna

Senator George cranks his ancient telephone.

By HAROLD MARTIN.
Staff Writer.

Just this side of Vienna, Ga., on the right hand side of U. S. Highway 41, going south, a little white cottage with green blinds sits beneath the spreading branches of an ancient live oak tree. A broad driveway of crushed pecan shells curves beside it, and the green foliage of lugustrum, lobelia and spruce nestle against it. All in all, it is as pretty, but as unpretentious, a little place as you will find along that road.

Four years ago it was a weather-stained tenant house, shabby and beginning to lean a little under the weight of nearly half a century.

Today it is the home of Walter Franklin George, United States Senator from Georgia, and as chairman of the powerful senate committee on foreign relations and a member of the equally important senate finance committee, one of the most distinguished members of that body.

The home he lives in is typical of the man. Plain, simple and unpretentious, at home among his friends, he leads the life, as best he can, of any other lawyer-farmer in a small town.

It is not as leisured an existence as that of his neighbors, of course. For a man in his position has little time he may call his own. The plain little red-brick office which he maintains downtown is always full of people, wanting something he can help them obtain, or asking him what channels to pursue to get what they seek. The phone, there and at home, is forever ringing.

But in its simplicity and total lack of swank it differs little from that of his fellow Viennans. There is always a place at the George table for the chance visitor who happens to be around at mealtime. But the Georges do not entertain formally.

Though in manner and appearance the Senator is dignified, imposing and in his attire even quietly elegant, the ingrained habits of a hard-working boyhood as the son of a tenant farmer are still with him. He is strictly an early-to-bed-early-to-rise man.

He gets up at 6 o'clock, which in the winter-time is before daybreak, and eats a light breakfast, consisting usually of fruit juice and two cups of coffee. Shortly before seven Mrs. George ("Lucy" to the senator) takes him to town, herself a little drowsy because she is not as fond of seeing the dawn come up as he. She drives, but he does not, a fact which she bitterly regrets when the morning is wet and cold.

Arriving at his office about seven, usually before the secretarial staff, which he maintains when at home, has arrived, he pokes some kindling and paper into the little stove in the outer office, pours in some coal and lights a fire. He is very proud of his fire-lighting ability, and sometimes

With the office open and the fire going he then strolls up to the street a block to the post office, where he twiddles the dials of box 36, the same box he has had since a young man, and removes the heaviest mail that comes to Vienna.

His box is also symbolic of his unpretentious manner. Though his mail would warrant a larger, triple box, which rents for $2.25 a year, he sticks to the smaller one, which costs only $1.80. The bigger boxes are left for the two Vienna newspapers, the bank and the insurance companies.

Though secretaries may be available for this trip, he likes to get his own mail, and sometimes, when he gets the chance, goes to the post office five times a day, once after each train.

These trips give him a chance to get out and see the people he knows and pass the time of day. He is not a man to gush, and his greeting, though friendly, is not accompanied by back-slapping or hand-wringing. He says "Howdy" Jim, or Joe, or Zeb or what-not, and they say, "Howdy, Senator," or often just "Howdy, Mr. George," and

Atlanta Business Shatters Records Of 1939 With Great 1940 Increases

Bank Debits And Clearings Up by Millions

Year Marked by Steady Progress With Whirlwind Finish.

By WILLARD COPE.

From every point of view Atlanta in 1940 wrote real commercial history.

It will be about the tenth of January when the adding machines finish tabulating and analyzing just what did happen, but there can be no doubt that the volume of activity in every field was phenomenal.

There was steady progress throughout the year, with a whirlwind Thanksgiving and Christmas finish.

Known spending—that is, actual bank debits—was almost $20,000,000 more in the first three weeks of this December alone than in the corresponding period of 1939.

The same comparison of bank clearings shows an increase of $50,500,000.

Postal Receipts.

The debits amounted to $190,174,000, while clearings were $260,500,000.

In the official Christmas period, December 16 to 25, inclusive, the post office handled 1,385,570 or 20.85 per cent more pieces of mail than in the like period of last year.

These may be cold figures, but should not be dull.

Every one of the various categories by which statisticians measure progress tells the same story.

An estimate of department store sales through December 21 put the increase at 8 1-2 per cent beyond last year's figure for the same three weeks' period.

Post office receipts were $458,365 for just the first three weeks of December, representing a rate of money increase expected to prove greater than 20 per cent.

Water meters at December 21 stood at 68,168, an increase of 1,926.

South's Prospects.

Telephones numbered 94,832, or 6,693 more than at the beginning of the year.

Electric meters were 92,171, an increase of 3,667.

There were 67,248 gas meters, as compared with 64,344 on January 1, an increase of 2,904.

Building permits through December 21 totaled $16,498,920—an increase of 63 per cent over the total 1939 figure. There were 3,122 individual permits as compared with 2,912 for all of 1939.

Men Who Run the War

The human stories of the men who run the war—upon whom rest the entire burden and the ultimate responsibility to numberless millions of persons—will be printed in four articles, starting tomorrow, by The Constitution. These men, Winston Churchill and Adolf Hitler, are two of the strongest characters—for good and for evil—the world has ever known. Their stories are great human documents.

60 Per Cent in U. S. Nation To Hear F.D.R. Defense Report Tonight

PRINCETON, N. J., Dec. 28.—Back in the spring of 1939—months before the outbreak of war in Europe—surveys of American public opinion showed that the people of the United States would have two basic desires in the event of a European conflict—first, to stay out of the war, and second, to render all possible assistance short of war to Britain and her Allies.

There have always been elements of paradox in this picture, of course. Could the United States actually lend her material assistance to Britain without being drawn into the fighting too? In a crisis, which would prove to be the master principle—the desire to stay out of war, or the desire to help Britain win?

Throughout the past 16 months of war the two basic desires have remained constant, explaining much of the American attitude toward events in Europe.

Today, as the nation steers toward the uncharted waters of 1941, surveys of the American Institute of Public Opinion give an illuminating picture of what ordinary citizens in all walks of life are thinking:

1. The vast majority of Americans still want the United States to "stay out." In the latest Institute survey 88 per cent say they would vote against war today if the question were raised in a nation-wide referendum; 12 per cent say they would vote to enter. Because of recent British successes, and because many think that our increased material assistance will turn the tide, the number favoring U. S. entrance is smaller today than

Sharp Slashes In Jobless Seen By Jesse Jones

Bright Prospects for 1941 Cited by Secretary of Commerce.

By the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 28.—

Secretary of Commerce Jesse H. Jones said today that business prospects were so bright that "in 1941, for the first time in a decade, we may confidently look to substantial progress toward elimination of unemployment as a major problem in our society."

In a year-end statement, Jones, who is also federal lending administrator, said, "Business moves into 1941 operating at record levels. It can look back on the year just past as one of vigorous expansion which in total produced the best results in a decade. It can look forward to 1941 as a year that will bring further progress and the advance of our per capita output to a new record."

Jones said that the spurt in industry, which he credited primarily to the defense program, already had taken up some unemployment slack, and that between February and October 2, 300,000 persons got new non-agricultural jobs.

The better business record, he said, was shown in an estimate that income payments to individuals increased to $74,000,000,000 in 1940, a gain of $4,000,000,000 over 1939. This was a calculation of all wages, dividends, rents, royalties, business profits and similar individual income in the country. It differs only slightly from annual "national income" estimates.

In 1940, he added, retail sales were about 7 per cent larger, and construction about $9,000,000,000 more than in 1939. He noted that a 10 per cent rise in residential construction accompanied industrial and governmental building.

"One of the most encouraging features of the current rise in business activity," Jones added, "has been the absence of any considerable advance in prices."

The secretary said the business picture has changed so drastically that officials must think now of increasing productive facilities instead of worrying about idle plants as formerly.

Politics, Crime, Nature's Blows And Draft Top 1940 State News

Violence—both of nature and human emotions—politics and rumors of political corruption and the backlash of the European War marked Georgia's 1940 news.

Torrid winds tore at Albany and a record breaking freeze and snowfall paralyzed the northern part of the state.

Politics boiled over with federal accusations of graft in the State Highway Department and the trial and subsequent acquittal of Congressman Frank Wheeler, of Gainesville, on charges of selling postal appointments. Coming back with his old-time vigor and strength, Eugene Talmadge was elected Governor to succeed E. D. Rivers. The Rivers administration made news by use of the National Guard to gain complete control over the Highway Department.

Atlantans again defeated a bond issue for civic improvements and elected Roy LeCraw mayor over William B. Hartfield.

Brutal floggings in East Point, the murder of Ike Gaston and sensational trials of the floggers focused attention on crime. Floyd Woodward was captured after a 20-year search and the Peek murders were solved. Millions of dollars were poured into the state by the army for the construction of immense training camps, air bases and supply depots as the draft became operative.

Mrs. Donehoo Announces for Coroner's Post

Conducted Affairs of Office During Illness of Her Husband.

Mrs. Paul Donehoo, wife of Fulton county's coroner who died unexpectedly last week, announced yesterday her candidacy to succeed him in the office, pointing out she had been his assistant and, during his illness, had conducted the affairs of the office.

Her statement follows:

I wish to announce my candidacy for the office of coroner of Fulton county to succeed Paul, who passed away last Sunday morning.

For several years, as most of you know, I have been Paul's assistant, taking care of his office, assisting at the inquests, and answering all calls, of whatever nature and at whatever place, at any hour of the day or night, when the presence of the coroner was required. During his long illness last summer I assumed full responsibility of the coroner's work.

I am 35 years old. I attended grammar school and high school, graduating with first honors at Social Circle, Ga. I attended State Teachers' College, University of Georgia, and Southern Business School. For four years I taught English and for six years I was connected with an Atlanta business house, resigning for my marriage to Paul. We have a little daughter, Peggy, who was three years old in September and a little son, Paul Donehoo Jr., who will be nine months old on January 10.

In giving me your support, you will allow me to serve the term to which you had already elected Paul and which would have begun next Wednesday. You will allow me to continue doing the work I have already been doing for several years and which I have been fitted by experience and training.

You will give me the opportunity which any one of you would hope for under the same circumstances—the opportunity to carry on the work of Paul's life and to rear our children.

Harry G. Poole Enters Race for Fulton Coroner

Profession Qualifies Him for Job, Funeral Director Says.

Harry G. Poole, head of the Harry G. Poole Company, one of the oldest funeral directors in Atlanta, last night formally announced his candidacy for the post of coroner of Fulton county, with the following statement:

The job of coroner is the only public office that a funeral director is specially qualified by his profession to handle. The duties of the office are to decide with the assistance of a physician and a jury the cause of death in the unexplained deaths, where there are no witnesses or where a physician cannot sign the death certificate. As qualifications for this office, I can offer the people of Fulton county not only 17 years' experience as a funeral director, but also the knowledge gained by close contact with the coroner, and my attendance at more than 1,500 inquests. I know the duties of the coroner and the law governing the office. As evidence that I am qualified to handle the office for any personal purpose, I pledge publicly that on any case where the coroner has the power to select a funeral director, I shall rotate my choice among local companies in alphabetical order.

To those in Fulton county who do not know me, I was born here 17 years ago, grew up in Atlanta and attended the public schools. I have been in my present business, which was founded by my father, the late Harry G. Poole, for 17 years. While I have been active in many civic projects, this is the first time I have ever offered for a public office.

William Phillips To Go By Clipper to Rome

WASHINGTON, Dec. 28.—(AP)—William Phillips, ambassador to Italy, said today that he would leave Tuesday for Rome by clipper plane from New York.

The ambassador, who has been on sick leave in the United States for several months, came to Washington today to confer with President Roosevelt and Secretary Hull.

From Lisbon, Phillips expects to proceed to Rome by automobile. Air service to the Italian capital has been abandoned because of war conditions.

Lower Temperature, Cloudy Skies Forecast

Partly cloudy skies and lower temperature have been forecast for Atlanta today by the United States Weather Bureau.

Rains should be over by this morning, according to the bureau forecast. Lowest temperature expected today is 48 degrees. Yesterday's high and low were 59 and 56.

Coroner's Post Being Sought By Huddleston

Candidate Cites Record of Willingness To Help Atlanta.

Predicating his campaign for election as coroner to succeed the late Paul Donehoo on "50 years of usefulness and my willingness to aid in every good movement for the cultural and moral uplift of Atlanta," Press Huddleston, former city councilman, alderman and mayor pro-tem, yesterday issued a formal statement of his candidacy.

Text of the statement follows:

I feel that my long residence in Atlanta and my long and experienced service for the city and county, as councilman, alderman, mayor pro-tem, city clerk, as well as service on grand juries and other juries, qualifies me for the position of coroner—a very important place. There are no issues involved. It is merely a question of personal friends who will go to the polls and vote for their friend.

I am not trying to ride into office because of my membership in this or that patriotic or fraternal organization, or the church, I belong to many of them—I am proud of my membership in them—and have, I hope, many friends in all of them, and certainly hope for and will appreciate my quota of votes from them. What I would stress, however, is the usefulness I have tried to be to my community.

I feel that my service and my citizenship in Atlanta for more than 50 years, my willingness to aid in every movement for the cultural and moral uplift of Atlanta, my experience as a public servant in the past, is known to all of my friends, and I am making my announcement as a candidate for coroner in the hope and belief that my friends, and the voters generally, will not overlook my earnest desire to serve them in this important public office, and that they will go to the polls and vote for me. I have been active in this entire work spreading my intention to many friends, and have had such a favorable reaction that I am now into the race "up to my ears."

County Records 4 Millions in Tax

The Fulton county tax collector's office yesterday had recorded $4,495,751 of the 1940 state and county digest of $5,618,561.

The county's share of the total collected through Saturday is $3,133,202. Collector T. Earle Suttles reported.

Fulton Board To Formulate Plans for 1941

Tentative Budget Calls for Reduction of More Than $500,000.

By KEN TURNER.

The Fulton County Commission will meet twice this week to formulate plans for operation of the county government in 1941.

Tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock the board will meet in special session to adopt a tentative budget to be submitted by County Auditor James L. Respass and at 2:30 o'clock Wednesday the commission will hold its annual reorganization session.

While details of the new budget have not been completed, it was understood the tentative budget calls for expenditures during the year of $3,860,644.83 as compared with $4,416,580.97 which was budgeted in 1940. This represents a reduction of more than $500,000.

Troy Chastain, vice chairman of the board, is scheduled to be chairman of the board at the reorganization meeting Wednesday morning, succeeding E. L. Almond. Commissioner I. Gloer Hailey is scheduled to succeed Chastain as vice chairman.

While it has long been a custom of the board to name the retiring chairman to the powerful public works committee, Almond is reported not to want it and it is anticipated that the post will go to Dr. C. R. Adams, present chairman of the police committee.

Almond and Hailey are both "candidates" for the police committee chairmanship, which is a potent political factor in the county.

Charles Brown, new member of the board, is scheduled to be named chairman of the alms and juvenile committee, which includes jurisdiction over all public welfare matters.

Although the chairman of the board generally heads the public grounds, building and purchasing committee, it is being forecast that Chastain will hold on to his parks committee chairmanship instead.

If Chastain decides to retain his present post, Almond will probably retain his chairmanship of the grounds, building and purchasing committee.

Burnett To Head Stress Democracy, Piedmont Lodge

William C. Burnett was elected worshipful master of Piedmont Lodge No. 447, F. & A. M., at the 38th annual communication held in the Masonic Temple. He succeeds Edward A. Ryder.

Other officers elected and appointed were M. E. Kendrick, senior warden; T. C. Barry, junior warden; P. B. Rowland, treasurer; Bartis E. Goodman, secretary; J. C. Hutchinson, senior deacon; Robert V. Davis, junior deacon; Ben T. Hatfield, senior steward; Charles D. Ward, junior steward; Hervey W. Reese, chaplain; E. J. Thornton, tyler; L. P. Johnson, organist; E. F. Armstrong, soloist; M. S. Johnson, Masonic hall trustee and director of the Masonic Temple Company, and Bartis E. Goodman, representative on the Masonic board of relief.

The retiring worshipful master was presented with a wrist watch, a gold life membership card, and a past master's jewel.

John Slappey Announces for Coroner Office

'Actuated Solely by Desire To Occupy' Post, He Says.

John G. Slappey, Atlanta lawyer and justice of the peace in the Blackhall district, made the following announcement in connection with his candidacy for coroner:

I wish to announce my candidacy for the office of coroner of Fulton county. I have not been prevailed upon by anyone to make the race and am actuated solely by my desire to occupy this office for which I feel fully qualified. I am entirely familiar with all duties attending a proper administration of the office. I have conducted inquests for our late coroner upon a number of occasions.

I am a native Georgian, 51 years of age, and have lived in Fulton county for 36 years. I have been justice of the peace of Blackhall district for 16 years. I have practiced law in Fulton county for the past 18 years and was a clerk of the Central of Georgia railway for 14 years and have never offered for public office.

I am not a politician and do not expect to play politics with this office and have only my qualifications and a sincere desire to creditably and conscientiously fulfill the duties evolved upon me if elected, to recommend me to the voters.

30 Candidates Making Race For Coroner

Two More Days for Entries; Election To Be Held January 15.

Fulton county's race for coroner became a wide-open free-for-all yesterday as nine more candidates qualified with the county ordinary to send the list of entries to 30 with two more days in which prospects may enter.

The election will be held Wednesday, January 15. Entries close Tuesday night.

Mrs. Paul Donehoo, wife of the late coroner, became a candidate yesterday to succeed her husband who died a week ago after holding the job for more than 30 years.

Others who qualified were: Press Huddleston, Atlanta newspaper editor.

L. R. Horton, 855 McDonough boulevard.

Joe Hill Smith, 1655 Orlando street, S. W., an attorney.

John Campbell, 100 Hunter street, restaurant operator.

Walter McCarron, 354 East Wesley road, N. E.

R. L. "Bob" Williams, 1056 Stewart avenue, S. W.

Miles W. Barge, Stonewall, Ga.

Robert "Bob" Giles, an attorney.

Stress Democracy, Hutchins Urges

NEW YORK, Dec. 28.—(AP)—Robert M. Hutchins, president of the University of Chicago, declared today that although the possibility of "imminent danger of attack" was important in defense preparation, it was "not as important" as the "duty to our country to recapture and revitalize" the principles of democracy.

In a certain address at the Metropolitan opera, which was broadcast over a national network, Hutchins asserted, "Democracy as a fighting faith can be only as strong as the convictions which support it."

"Now democracy is not merely a good form of government. It is the best. The reasons why it is the best are absurdly simple," Hutchins continued. "It is the only form of government that can combine three characteristics: Law, equality and justice. A totalitarian state has none of these, and hence, if it is a state at all, it is the worst of all possible states."

George Lives Quiet, Spartan Life at Vienna

he chats a minute or two about the weather, or about whether there are plenty of birds or not (the senator used to love to hunt before his eye operation two years ago) or about farming.

He knows about farming first hand, not only because of his youthful experience, but from practical experience since there are 200 acres in the place where he now lives, and he is half-owner of another, much larger place, a few miles from town.

Back in his office he looks over his mail, answers what needs answering, and sees people. Most of them, if they have come a long way, have appointments. Many just drop in. To them all he shows an unflinching courtesy, giving them as much time as they seem to want, and listening patiently to their accounts of their health long after they have finished what they came to say.

It seems to have no desire to hurry the long-winded ones. His only concession to this point is to place in his own private office straight, stiff-backed chairs, far less comfortable than the springy, modernistic tube-steel seats of the outer office waiting room.

His patience with people sometimes annoys Mrs. George, who tries to protect him from imposition when she can. But she finds it hard, for he has not the type of mind that readily falls into subterfuge.

Example of Patience.

For instance, one midday last summer some people came by the house and the Senator went out to speak to them. They wouldn't come in, and they wouldn't go, and she watched him from the window, standing in a blazing sun hot enough to fade his brains, making no effort to terminate the conversation. So finally she went to the side porch and called "Mr. George, it's time for you to make that long-distance call."

"What long-distance call?" said the Senator. "I do not recall having to make any long distance call."

"I could have pulled all his hair out," she confessed.

When the clock in the tall red tower of the Dooley county courthouse bongs noon, the Senator cranks the ancient telephone on his desk, calls Mrs. George, and she comes for him. Dinner, prepared by an old Negro woman named Ada, is ready when he gets home and he eats sparingly and returns immediately to his office. He takes no afternoon snooze.

In the afternoon, the late mail calls for more dictation, and the stream of visitors continues. Sometimes, though, in a breathing spell, he strolls across the square to the broad front porch of the courthouse, where he sits in a venerable rocker and talks with the folk who work there and those who drop by.

It is generally dark before he cranks the phone and calls Mrs. George to come for him at the end of the day. At supper he again eats sparingly. He has no particular likes and dislikes in food, except that he prefers home cooking to the best hotel cuisine, and he is fond of sweet potatoes, sliced and fried. This is a dish which his late father-in-law, a blunt, outspoken man who set a good table, used to describe as "fit only for po' white trash." This never dimmed the senator's fondness for them.

Smokes Cigarettes.

After supper he relaxes in a soft arm-chair to read the papers—a smoking stand on one side of him, for he smokes many cork-tipped cigarettes of a mild brand, and the telephone table on the other. The calls keep coming, even at night, and he likes to take them himself. It saves people trouble.

The papers finished, he listens to the radio and, though he likes musical programs, he generally dials a news broadcast, for things move so fast abroad it is difficult to keep abreast. Mrs. George is patient with this, though she sometimes fusses mildly when the senator is listening to news when she wants to hear Charley McCarthy.

At 8, or shortly thereafter, he goes to bed. It is not for an unbroken rest, though, for calls keep coming until late, and he frequently has to get up to speak with someone on the phone. Miss Nellie Turton, who owns the private phone exchange that serves Vienna and is the night operator, hates to call him after he has gone to bed, but he won't give her orders not to disturb him, so she has to do it.

He gets no exercise, has no relaxation, no outside amusement. He used to hunt a lot, but stopped hunting when his eyes went bad. He had the choice of which eye was to be operated on two years ago, and he chose the wrong one, from the hunting standpoint. The aiming eye is still weak. He forgot about this when the doctor gave him his choice. His sight is fairly keen now, with the aid of thick-lensed glasses, which magnify his eyes somewhat.

Still Goes Fishing.

He still goes on hunting and fishing trips though, for he enjoys sitting around and talking, and he will watch a poker game for hours, though he does not play himself.

He is not talkative at home, and rarely discusses problems of statecraft with his family, though once in a great while he will ask RESTING—After a working day that begins at seven and ends at six, Senator George relaxes in an easy chair at his little Vienna residence, reads the papers and listens to the radio. He keeps the phone close by, for it rings often. Up at six, he goes to bed by nine o'clock.

Mrs. George's opinion on some matter that is troubling him. He has little time for reading, though his bookshelves both at home and at the office are crowded with a heterogeneous collection in which Kipling rubs shoulders with recent treatises on foreign affairs or finance, and Mark Twain shoulders books of history, letters and messages of the Presidents, and volumes of the world's great orations.

Though possessed of a whimsical wit he takes life seriously and has grown into a worthy replica in manhood of the 16-year-old boy who could talk to a Masonic convention for 40 minutes on "The Duties of Citizenship."

To illustrate this, Mrs. George tells of the time she was caught for speeding through Coolidge, Ga., by a motorcycle officer who told her, "Lady, you were driving entirely too fast."

She looked to Mr. George, sitting beside her, for aid in her emergency, but got little.

"You are right, officer. She was driving entirely too fast," he said, to her dismay.

In Good Condition.

Careless of his own comfort, she looks after him. They were living in the old Lacyon hotel at Vienna, when she suddenly decided to remodel the old tenant house and make a charming home of it. He thought, and told her, it would turn out to be "a stem-winding mess," but it didn't. He never knows what she will do next in the way of remodeling. He went out of town once and came back to find his musty old office completely remodeled. Simply, but much more comfortably than it was before.

Physically, he is ready to go back to Washington to tackle the tremendous problems the chairmanship of the Foreign Relations Committee has thrust upon him. He wore himself down to 170 pounds when campaigning two years ago, but is back up to 185 now, and seems to feel fine. He inherited a rugged constitution from his father, who in his 89th year is still spry as a cricket and looks very much like a white-haired pocket edition of his distinguished son.

He does, though, dread the social obligations that face him when he gets back to Washington. The chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee must go to all functions given by foreign embassies, and he loathes functions. He still remembers once when, with a severe toothache, he had to take in to dinner the wife of the French ambassador, who spoke no English. He spoke no French and the dinner was a struggle.

He dreads the demands these affairs will make upon the time and strength of a busy man, and he now is planning to wiggle out of attending some of them.

Mrs. George suspects this, for, the other evening, when discussing

W. R. Watkins Is Dead at 81; Rites Today

Native of Toccoa Will Be Buried in Greensboro, Ga.

William R. Watkins, 81, died yesterday at the home of his son, J. L. Watkins, of 637 Whitaker street, N. W.

A native of Toccoa, he was a charter member of the Second Baptist church of Toccoa, which he helped organize. He retained membership there even after moving to Atlanta, where he had lived for 25 years.

He was employed in the textile industry most of his life. Surviving are his three sons, J. L., J. D., and O. J. Watkins, of Atlanta, and several grandchildren.

Services will be held at the Greensboro (Ga.) Baptist church, at 12 o'clock this noon (C. S. T.), with the Rev. C. Dewitt Reagan officiating. Burial will be in the cemetery of the church, with Pruitt and Yarn in charge of arrangements.

their return to Washington tomorrow, he said to her plaintively: "Lucy, I'm afraid you are going to have to hire yourself a gigolo."

Though his public addresses are masterpieces of spoken prose, and his usual conversation is couched in deliberate, but faultless English, at home he sometimes slips easily into the idiom.

For instance, in terminating a conversation with someone who has sought his advice or help, he may say in farewell:

"Well, I hope you luck."

The almost Spartan simplicity of his life, with its lack of ostentation and fanfare, his close friends declare to be in no wise a pose. He lives that way, they point out, because he likes it, and also because anything on a more grandiose scale would be beyond his means.

An honest statesman, they point out, does not get rich in office.

WPA Will Be Vital Defense Cog—Harman

Many Airport and Highway Projects Under Way Already.

Closing a calendar year that has seen the most profound changes since its creation to fight depression unemployment, the Work Projects Administration in Georgia is "tooling up" to become in 1941 an important cog in national defense, according to Harry E. Harman Jr., state administrator.

From January 1, 1940, through November, local sponsors and the federal government expended $36,675,199 in the state on thousands of projects, with WPA expending $25,996,443 of the total.

In the last six months the WPA has turned so swiftly to national defense that a large per cent of its total employment now is on projects certified as important by the War and Navy departments. These include airports, improvements at military establishments and similar work, to which more than $3,000,000 has been allotted.

Several other defense projects are in the planning stage, including an important program to develop strategic highways essential to military movement.

Latest Figures. Latest figures, for the week of December 18, show that 2,900 workers are assigned to defense projects. Total employment for the week was 42,473, of which about one-third were women.

WPA airport construction is now under way at Augusta, Macon, Albany, Americus, Camp Gordon and Atlanta. All these have been certified as important to national defense, which means that certain restrictions as to employment and financial participation by the sponsoring agency may be waived in the interest of speed. On some of these projects, the WPA, for the first time in its history, is completing part of the work by special contract and machine operation.

The WPA also is operating an important air-marker project. Other airport projects are being discussed for Gainesville, Bainbridge, Thomasville, Valdosta, Cedartown, Cordele, Tifton, Dublin, Columbus and Moultrie. These include improvements to existing facilities, as well as construction of new fields.

The highway program is not so well developed as the airport work, but preliminary details are being worked out for a series of "access" roads near Army and Navy training centers.

New Emphasis. The new emphasis of the WPA on national defense is not confined to construction projects. As population expands swiftly around centers of defense activity, the WPA has been called upon for help in meeting health, education and recreation problems. The WPA is doing countless jobs, such as providing trained adult-education teachers to give refresher courses to newly mustered troops in concentration centers about the state.

Co-ordination of these community service projects is being worked out by a newly organized WPA state advisory committee, of which Richard C. Job, director of the State Planning Board, is chairman. This committee brings together WPA officials, representatives of other government agen-

Two Atlantans Will Celebrate 90th Birthdays

Mrs. Lucy Redd, M. W. Foche To Become Nonagenarians.

Two Atlantans will celebrate their ninetieth birthdays this week.

Mrs. Lucy Redd, whose birthday is December 31, will be given a birthday dinner at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Mary Cousins, of 2042 Hollywood road.

She is the widow of Thomas Redd, and formerly lived in Forsyth county, but has been in Atlanta 35 years. Besides her daughter, Mrs. Redd has two sons in Atlanta, M. L. Redd, of Hollywood road, and Dr. Stephen C. Redd, of 1428 Lanier place.

M. W. Foche will be 90 on January 2. He is a native of Marion county, and has been a farmer, warehouseman, county commissioner, and tax assessor there. He has been living in Atlanta two years with his daughter, Mrs. M. T. Horne, of 243 Fourteenth street. He has eight living children.

cies, private agencies, and citizen leaders, to plan better team work in defense activities.

Another new activity of the WPA, brought about by defense needs in the past year, is a gigantic training program. Many on WPA rolls who have vocational talents are being sent to school, without loss of their WPA security wages, to fit themselves for places in industry. Current enrollment in these classes is about 550, and about 2,000 have received refresher courses and preliminary industrial training since the program started.

Adaptability of WPA. All this activity illustrates the adaptability of the WPA to national needs.

When it was set up in 1935, the agency was geared to provide work for jobless persons on useful public projects. The nation faced a serious unemployment problem, and in its peak period the WPA provided more than 80,000 jobs each month in this state. As world conditions brought about a defense crisis in America, the WPA in the last few months has moved smoothly into this field, demonstrating its adaptability to a changed national emergency.

The primary responsibility of the WPA, however, remains the same. This is to provide work on useful public projects for unemployed breadwinners.

In 1940, the Georgia WPA provided these jobs for an estimated 88,493 different people. This includes the 48,849 employed at the beginning of the year, the 15,730 employed during the year, who had never before been on WPA, and an estimate of those reassigned who had not been employed previously during 1940.

662 Different Projects. The latest report available, for the week of November 27, shows the current 42,473 on WPA rolls are employed on 662 different projects. Construction projects number 355, of which 202 are highway and street projects. Since the inception of the WPA, nearly 8,000 miles of roads and streets have been built in Georgia.

Sixty-nine buildings are under construction at the present time. In five years the WPA has built 550 public structures and renovated over 2,000 others.

The professional and service division is operating 307 projects, the largest being the state-wide adult education, recreation, library and school-lunch activities.

The adult education program alone touches thousands of people. During one test two-week period, 25,381 Georgia grownups were taking instruction in 1,975 different classes.

In this same test period, 19,339 Georgians received treatment, tests, or immunization in WPA-assisted public health clinics.

Most of the $25,996,443 federal funds went directly to salaries and wages, being paid out to people in every local community and rural district in Georgia. This money went immediately into local trade channels and formed one of the largest single contributions to purchasing power in the state.

Only a small part of the federal funds—but most of the sponsors' funds—went for the purchase of materials and supplies, being spent largely with local business and industry.

Marx Honored By Selection For New Post

Heads Region No. 3 of National Town Hall Meeting Committee.

Dr. David Marx, rabbi of the Temple, has been named chairman of Region No. 3, of the new National Town Hall Meeting committee of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations, it was announced yesterday by Dr. Leo M. Franklin, Detroit, national chairman.

The United States is divided into 12 districts for the purpose of organization, and meetings designed to correlate Jewish history and ideals with current problems will begin the first week in January. Dr. Marx' region is composed of North and South Carolina, Georgia and Florida.

Proposed subjects for discussion include the synagogue in relation to prejudice, the emigre, Jewish education, religious leaders for the future, communal activities and the synagogue as an instrument for survival.

DOES FORD PAY GOOD WAGES?

HERE ARE SOME FACTS about Ford Labor. They cover wages, hours, and conditions of employment which have been in effect for more than 25 years.

During the year ended November 30th, 1940, the Ford Payroll throughout the United States averaged 113,628 hourly wage earners, not including office employees, students, or executives. They were paid $185,105,639.12. On this basis, the average annual wage was $1,629.05.

In the entire United States there are employed approximately 45,000,000 workers. According to the latest available government figures, the annual average wage of all workers in employment covered by old age insurance law was $841.00.

If these employees received the same average wage as Ford employees, the workers of the United States would have had additional wages of more than $35,000,000,000, thus increasing the national income about 50%. Think what such an increase would mean to the workers of this country and to the American farmer, whose prices are based on the national income.

Wage scales in the Ford Motor Company Rouge plants are divided into three classifications:

Unskilled... Both male and female, without experience, classified as non-productive. Minimum hiring wage . 75c per hour

Semi-skilled... Men with limited experience, classified both as non-productive and productive. Minimum hiring wage . 80c per hour

Skilled... Men with years of experience, classified as productive employees. Minimum hiring wage . 90c per hour

Wages paid above these minimums are in consideration of ability and years of service.

Minimum wage scales for unskilled labor at the Rouge plant are the highest in the industry. Top wages for skilled labor compare favorably with, or are higher than, wages in other automobile companies.

So much for wages. Now some facts on labor conditions in Ford plants:

Not only are sanitation and other health conditions the best in the industry, but Ford also leads in the equipment of safety devices for the protection of employees. Proof of this is found in the following Compensation Insurance figures for Ford in comparison with other plants:

Out of its vast experience, the National Association of Underwriters has computed a national average rate in automotive manufacturing plants that is in excess of $1.50 premium on each $100 payroll.

The Ford Motor Company's working conditions are so far superior that the Ford cost of workmen's compensation is less than 50c on each $100 payroll.

This indicates that the chance of injury in a Ford plant is much less than in the average automobile plant.

The Ford Motor Company has no age limit for labor, and in fact deliberately attempts to keep older workers working. The average age of Ford workers at the Rouge and nearby plants is 38.7. The youngest worker is 18. The oldest, a railroad car inspector, is 87. We have a crane operator who is 86, and a die maker who is 83.

A recent check-up shows that nearly one-half the workers at these Ford plants were 40, or over, falling into age groups as follows:

25,819 are between the ages of 40 and 50

14,731 are between the ages of 50 and 60

3,377 are between the ages of 60 and 70

417 are between the ages of 70 and 80

12 are between the ages of 80 and 90

In addition to the so-called regular employees, the Ford Motor Company has hired, at the same regular hourly wage, thousands of workers who are blind, crippled or otherwise incapacitated for normal productive work. At the present time, there are more than ten thousand such workers on the Ford payroll. They are not selected for their ability to build cars or to maintain the plant. They are on the payroll because of Henry Ford's belief that the responsibility of a large company to labor goes beyond the point at which the unfortunate worker can no longer produce profitably.

The above are facts. They have been and still are open to anyone who really wants to deal in facts. Anyone who wants to get a job... buy a car... or place a national defense contract on the basis of fair labor treatment must place the Ford Motor Company at the top of his eligible list.

Italy Warns U. S. Japan Will Enter War Over Irish Ports

Blunt Notice Served on Eve Of F. D. R. Talk

Conflict Would Spread to Pacific, Gayda Declares.

ROME, Dec. 28.—(UP)—Authoritative Fascist quarters tonight joined Germany in blunt warnings to the United States, on the eve of President Roosevelt's radio message, that it faces war with Germany, Italy and Japan if United States aid to Britain makes use of Irish ports.

Any delivery of American war materials to Britain in United States ships by way of Irish ports would "immediately involve both the United States and neutral Ireland in the war," the Fascist press said.

Virginio Gayda, who often speaks for Premier Mussolini, said that Japan is watching closely the United States' moves and will intervene immediately under provisions of the Italo-German-Japanese alliance if war materials should be shipped through Ireland's ports.

Forecasts F. D. R. Speech.

The Italian warnings, like those of Germany, were based on reports of undisclosed origin that Mr. Roosevelt in his Sunday night speech would propose excluding Ireland from the belligerent zone from which American ships are barred, thereby providing a "back door" for shipment of war materials to the British.

Roosevelt proposes to allow convoys of supplies to reach the British island escorted by a war fleet, said a headline in Il Messaggero.

"Doesn't London realize that an attempt to make Ireland a bridge between the United States and Britain would immediately involve both the United States and Ireland in the war?" asked the Popolo di Roma.

Gayda, writing in the Giornale d'Italia, stressed the warning that such a move would bring the United States face to face not only with war against Germany and Italy, but Japan as well.

"Open Violation." Either the delivery of war materials to the British by American ships entering Irish ports or the sequestering of Axis ships now tied up in American ports would be an open violation of American neutrality, according to Gayda.

The American people, he said, are divided now into three groups—those desiring open intervention on Britain's side, those against it and "those who want to aid England under cover."

"This last group, attempting to escape all responsibilities, is acting in the dark and leaving the initiative to the Axis and Japan in hopes of creating an alibi for the United States once the inevitable occurs," Gayda asserted.

"This same group favors the United States' giving warships and other war materials to England and sequestering Axis ships now in United States ports and handing them over to Britain, who is the enemy of the Axis. Now they want to ship war material to England by way of Ireland, which is the only neutral member of the British dominion."

U. S. Policy Attacked. "The Axis will consider any such action as an open violation of United States neutrality and tantamount to the United States' direct intervention in the conflict."

"The United States' interventionists would be responsible for spreading the conflict from Europe to North America and from the Atlantic to the Pacific. "It is useless to recall Mr. Roosevelt's repeated statements on the eve of his re-election because it is useless to recall the reasons for this dangerous political attitude of the United States which, in the name of peace, is attempting to spread the war throughout the world."

NAZIS APPROVE PRESS WARNING TO U. S.

BERLIN, Dec. 28.—(UP)—The controlled Nazi press, with the expressed approval of an authorized spokesman, tonight charged that alleged British plans to seize Irish bases and persuade the United States to convey supplies from the western hemisphere to Eire would prove "dangerous" to all participants in such schemes.

An authorized German spokesman characterized the Nazi press warnings to the United States as "excellent."

He said: "I think the way the German press handled this Irish problem was excellent and clearly discussed the situation on its correct proportions."

Vendor Added to List Of Odd War Casualties

LONDON, Dec. 28.—(P)—An orange and lemon seller was added to Britain's war casualties today.

When news spread that he was selling his wares from a barrow at Croydon, the man was surrounded by women who exchanged blows, knocked off one another's hats and screamed as they tried to buy the fruit.

Scratched and bleeding, the orange vendor fought his way out and called the police. When help arrived the women were gone and the barrow was bare.

"INTERIOR DECORATION."

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 28.—(UP)—Robin Paul Jr., 18 months old, had some ideas of his own relative to "interior decorations." He swallowed a half package of his mother's best stocking dye. His face was sunset red and his legs dark purple on the outside. With the aid of a stomach pump, his face returned to normal pink.

DESERT CONFERENCE—Pilots in a British Hurricane patrol hold a desert conference before starting out on a flight along their sector in the Middle East.

LINED UP FOR TAKEOFF—Their plans made, the British pilots line up for the take-off. Their objective is death and destruction to Italian desert troops.

OFF TO RAID THE ENEMY—A Hurricane is shown soaring away in flight. These ships have played an important part in British victories in the desert campaign.

Nazis Reported Moving To Foil Balkan Attack

Italian Debate Held Far From Disquieting to Hitler.

BUDAPEST, Dec. 28.—(P)—Authoritative informants reported tonight that the mass of men and material which Germany is sending to Rumania will be sent across Bulgaria to attack Greece only if Britain lands a force in Greece and attempts to invade central Europe.

These German troops—there are expected to be nearly 500,000 in the Balkans by the end of January—are described as chiefly an insurance measure.

The mass movement of additional troops now is under way in earnest and there is drastic curtailment of domestic train services to clear the tracks in both Hungary and Rumania.

Besides guarding against a back door thrust at Germany such as Britain attempted at the Dardanelles in the last war, the concentration in southeastern Rumania is expected by Germans to force Yugoslavia to accede to German wishes.

The German masses in Rumania also are designed to forestall reported Soviet designs to occupy Moldavia and the mouths of the Danube, and to deter Turkey from implementing her treaty with Britain and increasing her help to Greece.

As for the Greek affair, reliable informants here say Hitler agreed to Mussolini's attack on his neighbor only because he wished to quiet Italian clamor for slices of French territory. This, it was said, embarrassed Hitler because he wanted to give the Pétain government easy peace terms and win Vichy's full friendship.

Now the Italian debacle in Greece and Albania, it was said, is far from disquieting to Germany.

If Italy collapses, Hitler is reported as ready to make a full settlement with France, taking only Alsace and Lorraine.

HUNGARY CLAMPS TIGHT CENSORSHIP

BERN, Switzerland, Dec. 28.—(P)—Censorship was tight in Hungary tonight, with hitherto excellent telephone service "breaking down" in the midst of correspondents' stories on the movement of German troops through Hungary toward Rumania.

An Associated Press dispatch telephoned from Budapest tonight began: "Since the German forces began moving through Hungary in strength, censorship suddenly has increased." At this point the Budapest operator announced the line had "broken down."

From the outside looking in, the censorship appears to lack official recognition. Budapest operators insist coldly that "Your party does not desire to talk to you any more" or "Your party's office and home telephones have all broken down."

Nazi Commanders Honored by Hitler

U. S. To Stress 'Farming Out' Arms Contracts

NEW YORK, Dec. 28.—(P)—Two commanders of German auxiliary cruisers operating in "over-sea" waters have been awarded the Knight's Cross of the Iron Cross by Adolf Hitler, the German radio said in a broadcast today.

The two officers, recommended for decorations by Grand Admiral Erich Raeder, are Captains Krueger and Kaehler.

The former's ship, the radio said, has accounted for 79,000 tons of "enemy" shipping and has carried out "all other tasks assigned to it with great success," while Captain Kaehler's vessel has sunk 52,000 tons of "enemy" shipping or shipping in the service of the enemy.

Firms To Be Urged To Sub-Let Part of Work.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 28.—(P)—Borrowing from British experience, the War Department announced today that the policy of "farming out" arms contracts to small firms would be applied vigorously in this country to distribute the defense load as widely as possible.

Holders of defense contracts will be encouraged, the announcement said, to sub-let substantial parts of the work, and each will be expected to select his own subcontractors.

The British government first turned to the "farming out" principle late in the summer of 1938 when the aircraft industry there was asked to sublet a minimum of 35 per cent of its work on government orders.

HORSESHOE WITH LUCK.

EL MEDIO, Cal., Dec. 28.—(UP)—Paul Edwards believes he is in for luck for the remainder of his life. He found a horseshoe with a bent nail in it in the center of an oak tree, which had just been cut down, about eight inches from the outside bark. The horseshoe appeared to be 35 to 50 years old.

British Tighten Ring of Troops Around Bardia

Egypt Already Asking for Voice in Peace Negotiations.

CAIRO, Egypt, Dec. 28.—(P)—The concentration of British forces about beleaguered Bardia was officially reported proceeding "smoothly" today, while British artillery thundered steadily at that vital Italian base in Libya.

Advanced motorized detachments went on clearing the country to the west, general headquarters announced, and four additional Italian guns were captured.

The number of Fascist prisoners of war in hand and counted was put at 38,114, some 10,000 of them non-Italians.

To these captives the British attributed two stories—that the Italian defenders of Bardia, ordered by Premier Mussolini himself to "die rather than give up," would turn that base into a "second Alcazar," and that the Italian command was urgently strengthening the defenses of the port of Tobruk, to the west, in fear of an early British attack here.

The reference to Alcazar was to the 10-week defense of Spain's military academy at Toledo during the civil war by the forces of Francisco Franco.

It was disclosed today that many Egyptians apparently feel that Egypt, although not formally at war, has contributed enough to the Italian rout—giving the British food, communications and fighting space—to have a voice in the peace negotiations which may follow.

Mohamed Mahmoud Pasha, a former premier and head of the liberal party, observed that Egypt had played "an important role" and thus "owes it to herself to gather its fruits and be represented at the peace negotiations." In the press it is stressed that Egypt has faithfully lived up to her treaty obligations with Britain.

HEADS SHIP FIRM.

SAVANNAH, Ga., Dec. 28.—(P)—H. D. Pollard is the new president of the Ocean Steamship Company. A trustee of the Central of Georgia Railway, he succeeds E. R. Richardson, of New York, who resigned.

Snow Slows Greek Drive Into Albania

Troops Push Forward, However, at Bayonet-Point.

ATHENS, Dec. 28.—(UP)—Stiffened Italian resistance and bitter winter weather that has piled mountain passes with waist-deep snow today slowed the Greek counter-invasion of Albania, although Greek troops were said to be pushing forward at bayonet-point on all fronts.

Two months ago today Premier Benito Mussolini launched his attempted invasion of Greece, only to be hurled back, and tonight Greek forces were from 15 to 30 miles in Albania all the way from the Adriatic coast to Lake Orchida near the Yugoslav border.

Battle In Snow.

Some of the heaviest fighting today was in the snow-billed mountains of the northern front 12 miles north of Greek-held Pogradee where Evzone mountain troops were laying siege to the Italian fortress of Lin, a pivotal point of the war in that sector.

Tonight the Greek army was facing one of its greatest obstacles as the worst weather thus far descended upon all the front.

On the coastal front, where the Greeks are striking toward the Adriatic base of Valona from captured Chimara, their advance has been slowed down by snow and the natural barriers of rocky crags and steep mountains.

Defense Difficult.

On the central front the heaviest fighting continued around Klisura and the mountains north-east of this Italian stronghold, about 27 miles southeast of Valona, as well as southwest of near Tepelini, another strongly defended Italian front.

The defense of these two points by Fascist machinegun nests and gun emplacements which in many instances are cut in solid rock is extremely difficult to overcome, Greek spokesmen said.

A spokesman of the British Royal Air Force aiding the Greeks said today in reviewing the two months of the Italo-Greek hostilities, that 50 Italian planes are known to have been destroyed in Albania and Greece and that actually the number probably is nearer 66. Against this Italian loss, he said, the British have lost eight bombers and four fighter planes.

Nazi Raiders Held Prowling Oriental Seas

Supply Ships Believed Operating Out of Shanghai.

SHANGHAI, Dec. 28.—(P)—Stories of intensive German raider activity from the Indian ocean to the South Pacific reached here today, along with reports that two Nazi merchantmen equipped as sea prowlers recently left Kobe, Japan.

(This comes a day after the Australian government's report that a sea raider bombarded the British equatorial island of Nauru in the Pacific south of the Japanese-mandated Marshall Islands yesterday. The ship flew the Japanese colors at first, but ran up the Swastika just before it opened fire, the Melbourne navy ministry announced Saturday.)

Small Nazi freighters left Shanghai last week, possibly with supplies for the German raiders. Travelers from Hongkong brought reports that more than 20 Norwegian vessels had been sunk and a number of British vessels attacked by raiders in the Indian ocean.

British Warned Of Invasion, Shipping Perils

England Concentrating on Two Great Dangers. Facing Kingdom.

LONDON, Dec. 28.—(P)—The British public was plainly warned tonight that a great and perhaps decisive struggle was near.

The threat of a Nazi spring across the channel, said one informed source, was no more serious, than Britain's shipping situation.

"We are running as much chance of being choked by the (German) blockade before United States aid reaches its peak as we are of getting a knockout blow on the chin by invasion," he added. "You can take it that we're not going to be diverted from the job of countering these two real dangers flat-out by any side-show."

The Evening Standard, which is owned by Lord Beaverbrook, the British minister for aircraft production, suggested a like view that invasion was but one twin of the perils facing Britain.

"It is plain," said that paper, "that Hitler's whole and urgent purpose is to batter down the defenses of Britain before next summer. . . . The people of Britain are at this moment dependent for their lives on keeping the sea roads clear enough of bandits to let a percentage of traffic pass."

Send Your Laundry and Cleaning to Briarcliff Laundry

because... here is the finest, newest, most complete laundry plant in the world. . . . Every type of new and modern machine installed in a building especially designed for perfect, efficient operation. . . . A force of workers who are trained, well paid, well cared for, given free medical attention, and provided excellent cafeteria food for lunch. These people launder and clean clothes as only satisfied American workers can do—and that's why your clothes get cleanest at Briarcliff Laundry!

Briarcliff Cleaning
CLEANS SUITS AND DRESSES LIKE NEW and here's why

1. because the Santone cleaning fluid is a special exclusive solvent which gently and surely dissolves grease and stains and removes dirt from clothes without harming or drying the natural life and lustre out of the fibers or fabric.

2. Clothes Are Re-Shaped . . . not just a pressure pressing or pounding a crease in with an iron—but an actual re-shaping of garments on specially designed machinery, like that used in garment factories for new clothes, makes Briarcliff Santone-cleaned clothes like new.

3. When Does Clothing Need Cleaning? 1. When it is soiled, spotted or stained. 2. Even though it might show no soil or stain, it needs cleaning when any tell-tale body odors are picked up by the nose and retained. 3. Practically every time a garment shows need of pressing—it is better to have that garment pressed, than to have it soiled and then pressed. The saving of the garment is the most important reason why clothes are pressed without delay. The economy of pressing causes the acids in the garment to set up in the cloth so that they can never be removed.

Governor-Elect Is Besieged by Job Hunters

When His Car Stops at Red Lights, They Run to Him.

By JOHN CHADWICK.

A. Associated Press Staff Writer.

Anyone shouldering his way into Eugene Talmadge's law offices these days would think the governor-elect had said he was going to hire, instead of fire, a trainload of employees.

The job-seekers come in droves, from Georgia's mountains to the sea, and everyone of them feels he, or a friend, or a relative, is entitled to a place on the state payroll because of "unswerving loyalty to the 'Sage from Sugar Creek.'"

Talmadge, of course, rarely, if ever, visits his law office. Instead he seeks sanctuary in a hotel room and on weekends he retreats to his farm at McRae. Even so, he can't escape the hounding of those who are hungry for jobs.

Bulky Johnny Goodwin, who serves as a sort of bodyguard for the governor-elect, says that when Talmadge's car is stopped by a red light, two or three persons come running from the sidewalks, pump his hand, congratulate him and in the next breath ask him for a job.

Arrive Early. "And," continued Goodwin, "when the governor is at his home at McRae, two or three cars of people looking for jobs will be drawn up outside on Sunday mornings by 6 o'clock, even before the sun has come up. And the telephone rings all the time."

Goodwin is the first line of defense, so to speak, at Talmadge's hotel room, and he tries to lighten the burden on the governor-elect as much as possible. But often the job-seekers get the jump on him by slipping the porters and the elevator boys a quarter and thus finding out whether Talmadge is there.

One day this week Goodwin kept count of the persons who came to see the governor-elect. The total was 102. That, he said, is about an average figure for Mondays and Tuesdays. Later in the week the number falls since word has been passed around the state that Talmadge usually is out of town the latter half of each week. About 75 actually see him each day.

Goodwin says some of the job-seekers have private employment but assert they "want to work for the state." He asks them why and attempts to dissuade them, but they insist they "just do." Many farm boys, he said, want to become members of the State Highway Patrol.

Law Office Scene. The scene at the hotel room is almost hazy compared to the hurly-burly at Talmadge's law office. On some days the job-seekers hordes overflow the office, extend far down the corridor and around the corner to the elevator. The stampede for jobs started with Talmadge's entrance into the gubernatorial race last summer. The pace grew even faster after his nomination in the September primary and now, after slacking off somewhat in November, is about to reach a crashing crescendo.

Office employees estimated that between 150 and 200 persons stream into the office every day during the first part of the week. In addition about 300 letters are received each day. Some 50 per cent of these are applications for jobs or job references for somebody else. Most of the rest, as Mrs. D. M. Dozier, a stenographer, said, ask "everything but where to put the kitchen sink."

A woman writes to say "my man is needing a driver's license for the first time" and asks where to get it. A man wants to know how much his automobile tags will cost. And so it goes, with the Governor-elect's friends already looking to him for information about the state government.

Mobley Sees Them. The present staff at the office consists of four or five stenographers and Carlton Mobley, the Governor-elect's executive secretary. Mobley sees all who come, listens to their pleas and does the best he can for them. Talmadge's daughter Margaret (Mrs. W. H. Kimbrough) also has been lending a hand.

Most of the job-hunters are men, but a few women come and sometimes children are brought along. One little fellow whose father failed to see Talmadge, disappointedly asked: "Ain't we going to see the Governor, Pop?"

But the young boy is not the only one disappointed with the patronage business. In this week's issue of the Statesman, Talmadge's weekly newspaper, an editorial says in part:

"Many suppose the dispensing of public patronage a very pleasant duty. This thought has given rise to the supposition that the privilege, or duty, of placing friends in the public employment is a political asset.

"Those who have this duty find it a painful one. It would be a pleasure, beyond doubt, to afford a friend a place on the state payroll if no one else wanted the job. But when there is one job and 10 friends clamoring for it the selection becomes a very painful duty and of doubtful political asset."

"It is a friend, indeed, who has enough tolerance and understanding to realize that an official is sometimes powerless to do for him what deserves to be done."

Fendig Appointed Aide to Talmadge

Edwin Fendig, advertising man of Brunswick, Ga., has been named naval aide to Governor-elect Talmadge, it was announced yesterday.

Fendig will succeed Andrew A. Smith, formerly of Savannah, who held the same post under the ad-FIRER . . . HIRER?—Several weeks ago, Governor-elect Eugene Talmadge announced he will lead trains leaving Atlanta with ousted state employees after he takes office, but a look into his office shows he, himself, is beset with job seekers.

Candler Named Chairman for Birthday Event

Will Serve in Drive Against Infantile Paralysis for Third Year.

Scott Candler, of Decatur, has been named fifth district chairman of the eight annual celebration of the President's birthday. Ellis Arnall, chairman of the state organization, announced yesterday. This is the third year Candler has served in the campaign against infantile paralysis.

Half the money raised in each county in Georgia during the birthday celebration, January 30, the President's 59th birthday, will be used to fight polio in this state and the remainder will be sent to the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis to finance research and to combat epidemics.

Candler will have supervision over the campaign in Fulton, DeKalb and Rockdale counties, Mr. Arnall said. He announced the following district chairmen for the other nine congressional subdivisions of Georgia, who will also serve on the state committee: Edward A. Sutton, of Savannah, first district; J. D. Gardner, of Camilla, second district; J. R. Thompson Jr., of Columbus, third district; Quimby Melton, of Griffin, fourth district; Frank Dennis, of Eatonton, sixth district; J. M. C. Townsend, of Wildwood, seventh district; Ward Harrison, of Polkston, eighth district; W. L. Andrews, of Toccoa, ninth district, and Earl Braswell, of Athens, 10th district.

State Agencies To Co-operate On Deferment

Also Will Work With Draft, Army Officials in Finding Jobs.

State selective service machinery and employment, agricultural and educational agencies will be geared together for co-operation in two important phases of the draft act, state headquarters said yesterday.

First the three state organizations will help in determining what occupations are essential to industry, as they pertain to draft deferment.

Second, the state will work with draft and Army officials in setting up a re-employment program for trainees who have completed their year of service or who are rejected because of physical disabilities after they have resigned private jobs.

Commissioner of Labor Ben T. Huet has notified state draft officials that his office will co-operate in every way possible in compiling a list of essential occupations. Men filling such positions are deferred from training under the act.

Agricultural workers and college students also are deferred for certain periods of time, and the state agencies will furnish important data to draft administrators.

ministration of Governor Rivers. If the new Governor follows precedent, Fendig will be the only naval aide named.

Fendig was born in Brunswick July 7, 1901. He was educated in primary schools there and later attended schools at Seawater, Tenn. He is married to the former Miss Emory Neal, of Washington, Ga. They have two sons, Edwin Jr. and Neal.

Burch Praises Pilot Job Plan For Battle Hill

Program Would Fit Patients for Self-Support on Discharge.

Plans for a rehabilitation unit, launched for Battle Hill sanatorium by the Pilot Club, to fit patients for self-support upon their discharge, were praised warmly yesterday by Dr. J. C. Burch, sanatorium superintendent.

"We hope to get a full-time instructor next year," he said. "No doubt, when we are organized we can secure the services of experts in various fields to lend their efforts to the program by giving an hour or so a week to teaching at Battle Hill. Some of the Pilots have already said they would help in this manner."

"Of course, not every man could be a carpenter or a watchmaker, nor is every girl equipped to be a stenographer, but we hope to offer enough variety in our program to give every patient an opportunity to learn something useful."

"It is not possible to determine how long a patient will remain at the institution, and in some cases the patient will be dismissed before completing a course, but it isn't far out here, and we want to be set up to accommodate those patients who want to return for classes. Our whole purpose is to afford patients at Battle Hill opportunity to learn how to be self-supporting in work they are physically able to do when they are out again."

"The Pilot Club has been a good friend to Battle Hill in the past and we are most grateful for their efforts in helping us take this newest step forward."

DAY'S TROUBLE FOUR-FOLD.

SANTA CRUZ, Cal., Dec. 28.—(UP)—Ray Baker, carpenter, reported to the police his list of troubles, in chronological order, for one day as follows: Automobile accident; house burned down; imperiling himself and his six children; burglars entered garage and stole fishing tackle; burglars then amused themselves by shooting out all the windows.

Rise of Aid-to-Britain Sentiment

THE ABOVE CHART shows the trend of American public opinion on some of the major questions raised for United States voters by the war in Europe. The trend lines represent continuous surveys by the American Institute of Public Opinion on the questions of (1) greater aid to Britain (2) whether it is more important for the United States to help England even at the risk of getting into the war, or more important to stay out, and (3) the number who would favor United States entrance at this time.

60 Pct. Favor Aiding Britain At Risk of War

at the height of the blitzkrieg last fall.

2. Meanwhile, the desire to aid Britain with materials has steadily increased. By a vote of 9 to 1 voters in a recent Institute survey said they favored more help for England, in order to assure a British victory. The American people have begun to include under "acts short of war" certain steps which they were not willing to take when the war began.

3. And finally, an increasing number of Americans have come to the conclusion that—of the two basic desires—it is more important to help England win, "even at the risk of getting into the war," than to concentrate entirely on keeping out.

Sentiment Shifts.
Month by month since the victory of the Nazis in Norway last spring the Institute has asked American voters: "Which of these two things do you think is the more important for the United States to try to do—to keep out of war ourselves, or to help England win even at the risk of war?" Back in May—with the collapse of France still to come—the Institute found only 38 per cent saying it was "more important to help England," while 64 per cent said it was more important to keep out. In the latest survey, however, the replies are almost exactly reversed:

More important to help 60%
More important to keep out 40%

Here are the results by sections:

Help—At Risk Stay Out

Section	Help—At Risk	Stay Out
N. England and Middle Atlantic states	62%	38%
East Central states	54	46
West Central states	54	46
Southern states	75	25
Western states	65	35

Institute interviewers found that it was a question on which virtually every person they talked to had a definite opinion. Only one person in 50 (2%) said he was undecided. The trend on the question since May has been:

More Important To: Help England Stay Out

Month	Help England	Stay Out
May, 1940	36%	64%
June	36	64
July	39	61
August	47	53
September	52	48
October (during political campaign)	50	50
December	60	40

With the exception of a brief period during the American Presidential campaign, when both Roosevelt and Willkie stressed peace for the United States, the desire to help England, even at the risk of getting into the war, has steadily increased.

Other Signs.

"Other signs of growing American desire to aid Britain have been: (1) wide popular approval of the transfer of United States planes to Britain (2) overwhelming popular endorsement of President Roosevelt's destroyer-for-bases deal, and (3) increasing sentiment for repeal of the Johnson act.

Whereas 65 per cent were against repeal of the Johnson act in May, the picture was reversed by this month, when 55 per cent said they would favor repeal.

Some kinds of assistance a majority of the American people are still loath to give, however. Recently 60 per cent said they were against allowing American merchant ships to carry goods into the European war zones—a step which would involve changes in the Neutrality act.

Outright sentiment for declaring war on Germany and Italy, which rose sharply last summer at the height of the German blitzkrieg, has declined coincident with the news of British successes in Libya and Greek victories over Mussolini's troops in the Balkans.

Another Factor.
Another factor in the decline of outright war sentiment, the survey shows, is the belief that increasing United States material aid will make military assistance unnecessary.

It is significant in this connection that—except for a short time after the fall of France—a majority of Americans have rightly or wrongly believed that Britain would come out on top.

In its "war vote" question the Institute asked: "If you were asked to vote on the question of the United States entering the war against Germany and Italy, how would you vote—to go into the war or to stay out of the war?"

Twelve per cent of those with opinions on the question said they would vote to have the United States go in—to take the initiative in declaring war on the Axis. Eighty-eight per cent said they would vote to stay out.

Applied to the 50,000,000 Americans who cast their ballots in the November Presidential election, this means that a war vote today would find about 6,000,000 voting for United States entrance, 44,000,000 against it.

Interviewing in the latest survey was completed before Americans read of warnings from Berlin about extending further help to the British—notably warnings against turning over some of the interned merchant vessels in United States ports to the British. Changes in United States war sentiment cannot be traced to the effect of German warnings, therefore. Indeed it remains to be seen in future surveys whether these warnings will have the effect desired in Berlin, or an opposite effect.

It is interesting to note that the

Hint of Spanish Captives Given By Dare Stone

Indians May Have Held Them Prisoner in Northwest Georgia.

By CAROLYN MCKENZIE.

Before the name Georgia was born, before General Oglethorpe and his party ever set foot on our soil, Spanish prisoners might have been held by Indians in the northwest portion of the state, possibly the present location of Cartersville. It may be that some large number to Spaniards were encamped in that section, held under Indian domination, around 1603 when Virginia Dare and the Lost Colony of the Roanoke were making their hazardous trek down the banks of the Chattahoochee.

This is the essence of a message inscribed on the forty-eighth Dare stone which was recently found on the banks of the Chattahoochee river, in Fulton county, just 10 miles from Atlanta. The stone reads:

"John White manye prisoner fourtie mylles nw, Griffen Jones & Agnes Dare 1603."

Various messages on stones previously discovered indicate that Griffen Jones and the child Agnes Dare were the last of the colonists to survive. This point was revealed in Stone No. 47 which had their names and the date, 1603.

Spanish Expedition.

But this recent discovery sheds new light on the entire story. Breunau College authorities say that the reference made to prisoners could not mean any person other than Spaniards who were either searching out the English colonists or were seeking gold.

This fact is backed up, they say, by two specific instances revealed in literary works dealing with the period. It is known, according to Dr. H. J. Pearce, president of the college, that Juan Pardo, a Spaniard, some years before the Lost Colony roamed north Georgia, made an expedition into was surrounded by gold and other mines. This expedition took place in 1567 and could hardly be the group of prisoners referred to by Jones, but, the authorities say, with such stories current in Spanish Florida, other unrecorded treasure seekers probably followed in later years.

Tama as the Spaniards called the region. One of the members of his expedition later told in St. Augustine that the crystal mountain of Tama (Stone mountain)

Sought Colonists.

Dr. Pearce also cites the fact that Governor Pedro Menendez Marques sent an expedition as early as 1588 seeking the English colonists. This expedition stuck to the Atlantic coast and failed to find the colonists who had already gone inland, according to the evidence on the stones. Governor Gonzalo Mendez Canzo, of Florida, was vitally interested, around the turn of the century, in Tama and Apalache (Georgia areas) as mission fields and in 1603 Governor Pedro Ibarra, who succeeded Canzo, vigorously pushed Spanish mission activities in the Apalache section, where Spanish Franciscan missions made much headway later on.

Out of this interest in debarring the heretical English from Spanish lands, or in proposed mission fields, or in treasure seeking, may have come an unrecorded Spanish expedition around 1603, they say, which resulted in the imprisonment of many persons in northwest Georgia. Jones might easily have learned of the incident and possibly made his reference to the prisoners on this newly discovered stone.

Myron Taylor Placed Under Knife in Boston

Vatican Representative's Condition Termed 'Serious But Good.'

BOSTON, Dec. 28.—(AP)—Myron C. Taylor, 66, President Roosevelt's representative at the Vatican, was operated on this morning for gallstones, Dr. Frank Lahey disclosed late today.

Dr. Lahey, who performed the three-hour operation, said Taylor's condition was "serious but good."

"There is no question of malignancy," he said. The head of the famous Lahey Clinic said it would be a week or ten days before the crisis would be passed.

Mrs. Taylor was at the New England Baptist hospital where the operation was performed and remained at her husband's bedside afterward.

Taylor, former chairman of the board of the U. S. Steel Corporation, came to Boston December 21 and entered the hospital at once for observation.

He returned only recently from Rome, where he had been operated on for gallstones last June.

The Safety Clutch is like a lifeboat on a ship! You're mighty glad to have it when you need it!

In "Tight-Places" You'll Appreciate Chrysler's Safety Clutch!

For years drivers have been accustomed to disconnect the power of a car with the left foot. The motion has become instinctive!

In a tight place, every motorist reaches for the clutch... and needs the clutch... to maneuver safely.

In all normal driving... or at traffic lights, Fluid Driving doesn't require the use of the Safety Clutch.

You put on the brake to stop... release the brake and step on the throttle to go.

But in parking, or turning in close quarters, Chrysler's Safety Clutch enables anyone to drive a Fluid Drive Chrysler without learning anything new. You don't have to worry about teaching a new method to your wife and children... parking lot attendants... or friends.

Have you tried the joys of Fluid Driving in a Chrysler? If you haven't, you've been missing something! Make a date for a demonstration ride today!

* Tune in on Major Bowes, CBS, Thursday, 9 to 10 P. M., E. S. T.

FOR SAFETY!

Why Chrysler Includes a Safety Clutch with Fluid Drive!

Chrysler's Safety Clutch is just what its name implies... a Safety Device!

You will use it very seldom... but for maneuvering in close quarters, you'll find it a most desirable safeguard... preventing many small accidents... contributing greatly to your peace of mind.

Gales, Floods Menace Great Part of Nation

Shipping in Gulf Disrupted; N. Y. Rivers Are Swollen.

By UNITED PRESS.
Wind storms and the threat of floods menaced a considerable area of the United States today. For the first time in a week storm warnings were taken down along the California coast, but weather observers feared that a new gale, gathering 500 miles off the coast, might sweep inland. Winds of similar force were churning the waters of the Gulf of Mexico into waves so mountainous that shipping was disrupted.

United States meteorologists warned against strong winds from Black Island to Provincetown, R. I., and reported storms over northwestern Alabama and southwestern Virginia.

California rivers were rising. Gale-driven winds undermined a score of homes at Los Angeles and caused four to collapse. Thirty seamen were rescued from vessels off the California coast.

Florida towns suffered minor damage from high winds. At New York city's La Guardia field, where 215 flights are scheduled daily, rain and fog grounded all planes except those for Florida and Montreal.

FUN IN FLORIDA—Designed for exercise and casual wear, these beach fashions of the southland are the very latest at Palm Beach. Mrs. Robertson Rodgers (left), of New York, wears a white velvet dressmaker bathing suit for play on the beach while Mrs. Edward Ross Marshall, wife of Lieutenant Marshall, of Fort Benning, Ga., steps gaily out of the surf in a peach silk jersey swimming suit.

Atlanta Woman in Party Caught in Storm on Yawl.

Life has written another adventure story for Atlanta's Mary Lamar Knight.

The Associated Press reported that James D. Mooney, of Detroit, vice president of General Motors, and a party of three—including Miss Knight—made port early yesterday at Cat Cay, Bahamas, in the 90-foot yawl Mayhap after battling gales in the Gulf stream for a day and a night.

All of the party, including Mooney's son, Michael, 12, Mrs. Cecil Parker Stewart, of New York; Miss Knight, and a crew of four, escaped injury except for bruises. The heavy winds and rain squalls that hit Florida and western Cuba caught them en route from Cat Cay to Nassau, where Miss Knight was proceeding to invite the Duke and Duchess of Windsor to dedicate a new golf course next month at Cat Cay.

When but 35 miles out of Cat Cay Friday, the party was forced to turn back. They required more than three hours against battering winds to make the final four miles into port. All passengers took turns at the wheel while the crew worked at the sails.

Miss Knight is no stranger to adventure. The daughter of the late Lucien Lamar Knight, state

Donald Grant, lecturer on present-day Europe, will speak at the Sisters Chapel at Spelman College at 11 o'clock Thursday morning, and will meet with student groups and faculty for several informal discussions on Friday and Saturday. He has lived in London seven years, and did relief work in most of the countries of Europe after the World War.

Rotary club will meet at 12:30 o'clock tomorrow at the Ansley hotel. Franklin Garrett will speak on "Historical Atlanta."

Bank clearings yesterday totaled $15,800,000 as compared with $13,200,000 on the corresponding day last year. Clearings for the week were $76,100,000, a gain of $13,800,000 over the same week of 1939, the Atlanta Clearing House Association reported.

at the CITY HALL

Charles Mathews, newly elected city tax collector, yesterday was the first official to have taken his oath and qualify to begin serving in his job Monday, January 6. Mayor Hartsfield administered the oath. Eight other incumbent department heads and Luke S. Arnold, new recorder of the traffic department, were sworn in at the same time.

Re-election of Ed S. Cook to his sixth successive term as president of the Atlanta board of education is slated for 3 o'clock next Thursday afternoon when the board meets to reorganize for the new year.

B. Graham West, city comptroller, yesterday was signing checks to pay $241,000 in bond interest due the first of the year. Of the total due, $41,000 is for registered bonds.

Mrs. Louise Cox, assistant to Dr. John P. Kennedy, city health officer, was ill yesterday at her home, 1382 Belmont avenue, S. W.

ARMY in Georgia

Atlanta's army recruiting office has enlisted approximately 2,600 men since July 1, Technical Sergeant Cecil Mayes reported yesterday.

The figure is divided into months as follows: July, 243; August, 385; September, 775; October, 658; November, 342; and December, 195.

Mayes also announced that vacancies now exist in practically every branch of the army with stations in the south and the Hawaiian department. Men between 18 and 35, physically and mentally fit and without dependents, are invited to contact recruiting officers at 321 new post office building.

BENNING OFFICERS ARE TRANSFERRED

Transfers of three Fort Benning officers were announced by the War Department yesterday in Washington. Captains Raphael B. Esekiel and William B. Strandberg, both of the Corps of Engineers, were assigned to Fort Belvoir, Va., and Captain Sidney T. Telford was ordered to Montgomery.

CCC ENROLLMENT IS ASSIGNED STATE

Georgia has been assigned a CCC enrollment quota of 3,110 for January. Fourth Corps Area headquarters announced yesterday. Of the number, 2,988 will be juniors between 17 and 23 and the remainder war veterans.

Enlistees will be used to fill vacancies in the 1,500 CCC camps over the nation. Enrollment for a six months' period and the program includes vocational training in subjects useful to national defense.

GEORGIA FIRMS GET KHAKI CONTRACTS

Contracts to supply khaki cloth to the Army have been awarded two Georgia companies, corps area headquarters has reported. Sterling Textile Company, of Atlanta, has received a $30,030 contract for 140,000 yards, while the Sequoia department of the H. Schotia Company, of South Griffin, has received a contract for 250,000 yards at $52.947.

PAINT ORDERED FOR DEFENSE PROJECTS

Paint for three Georgia defense projects, the Macon replacement project, Camp Stewart at Hinesville and the Savannah air base, has been ordered from the Baltimore Paint & Color Works, Inc. The same company also received a contract for paint at Camp Blanding, the Tallahassee and West Palm Beach airports.

ENGINEERS TO SURVEY GEORGIA CAMPS

Camp Stewart, near Savannah, and the Macon replacement center are two of the 38 Army camps to be surveyed by civilian engineering firms who have contracted to study and recommend sewage disposal treatment, Fourth Corps Area headquarters reported yesterday. Under terms of the contract engineers will study local problems and recommend the best methods to the construction division of the quartermaster general. Contract also calls for periodic check-ups by the engineers.

REVIEW HONORS MASTER SERGEANT

FORT BENNING, Ga., Dec. 28. (P)—A regimental review honoring Master Sergeant John E. Grace, who is retiring December 31 after 30 years of army service, was held by the Eighth Infantry today. Sergeant Grace, a World War veteran who spent 27 years with the Eighth Infantry, is to become an instructor in a prominent military school.

Dog's Name Requires Explaining to Officer

AUGUSTA, Ga., Dec. 28. (P)—A woman giving police the details about a lost dog was asked the pet's name. "You know," she replied. "No, I don't," a policeman said. The woman straightened out the situation by explaining "You Know" is the dog's name.

Carey Pickard, Ace G-Man in South, Retires

Native of Buena Vista Plans To Enter Defense Industry.

Special to THE CONSTITUTION.
BUENA VISTA, Ga., Dec. 28.—Carey Pickard, native of Buena Vista and until his recent retirement from the Federal Bureau of Investigation service ace G-man in the mid-south, was to arrive here this weekend for a vacation before he takes up his new duties in "some type of national defense industry."

Since 1930 Pickard has been connected with the investigation of virtually every "crime of national importance." He joined the FBI service in 1930 following his graduation from Mercer University Law School.

When the Cash kidnaping case developed in Florida he was ordered to fly to Miami. There he was assigned to questioning of Frank Pierce McCall after his arrest on the kidnaping charge.

His last headquarters were in Memphis, where he turned in his credentials on December 19, receiving an honorable discharge from the service. Of the organization and his boss, J. Edgar Hoover, he said on retiring:

"The greatest chance in the world for a young man to serve under the direction of one of the greatest men."

While in Memphis he served in the unofficial capacity of assistant agent in charge of the Federal Bureau of Investigation office there, and on numerous occasions was acting agent in charge.

Refuses to Testify.
One time during his career there, his longtime friend, Federal Judge John D. Martin, threatened to cite him for contempt because he refused to testify to confidential information of the FBI in a case on trial before the jurist. It was not until permission from Director Hoover to breach the department's ruling had been obtained that Pickard agreed to testify.

Like most FBI agents Pickard was on 24-hour-a-day duty. Last year, when he was stationed in Nashville, Tenn., he received leave to go to Atlanta to visit friends and relatives.

While there he relaxed and played golf most of the time. One day, while in the middle of a round of golf, he received instructions to fly to Nashville. The Stoll kidnaping case had broken and he was assigned to carry on a major portion of the investigation.

Plans to Hunt.
During his decade of service with the FBI, Pickard has been assigned to offices and resident work in Seattle, Portland, Detroit, Toledo, Washington, Nashville, Knoxville, Atlanta and Memphis, in addition to special work during the Lindbergh kidnaping-murder case and in numerous fraud investigations.

While here he plans to get in some hunting before taking up his new work, the exact nature of which he has not revealed. He and Mrs. Pickard have a 3-year-old son, Carey Jr.

ENTERS POSTER CONTEST—The Atlanta branch of the British War Relief Society is conducting a poster contest to acquire a poster that packs an appeal for aid to the children who are suffering from bombings. Valeria McCollough examines a former poster of the society before beginning on her own art work for the contest.

British Poster Contest Closes On January 31

School Entering Best Collection Will Receive Prize of $10.

Boys and girls of junior and senior high schools in Fulton and adjoining counties are working hard during the Christmas holidays and when school begins many of them will have posters ready to enter in the contest of the British War Relief Society.

The Atlanta branch of the society is offering a prize of $10 to the school entering the best collection of posters. Nor is the contest exclusively for students. Any amateur artist who is more than high school age may enter the contest. For the winner of this division of the contest there is a $25 prize.

All posters must be sent to H. Reid Hunter, assistant superintendent of Atlanta schools; Jere Wells, superintendent of Fulton county schools, or Mrs. Laurie D. Webster, chairman of the poster committee for the society, at 1371 Peachtree street, by January 31. The posters may be done in any medium and any color. Black and white is also acceptable. The words "British War Society" must appear on the posters and short slogans of no more than eight words may be used. The appeal of the poster should emphasize the suffering of children of British who are the victims of bombs. Dimensions for the nonprofessional posters are 21 1/2 inches by 27 1/2 inches perpendicular and 14 inches by 22 inches vertical for the students' posters.

POSTAL RECEIPTS UP.
COLUMBUS, Ga., Dec. 28.—(AP) Postal receipts, reflecting the upward business swing in the Columbus area, are about 73 per cent higher than the previous record year. They totaled $371,453 here from January 1 through December 24, compared with $214,104 for the similar period in the banner year of 1928.

Georgia Farm Income Boosted By $20,000,000 By Churches

Cotton, Corn, Peanuts Chief Contributors to Increase.

ATHENS, Ga., Dec. 28.—(AP)—Cotton, corn and peanuts were the chief contributors to a $20,000,000 rise in Georgia farmer income from harvested crops as compared with 1939.

Estimates prepared by the crop reporting board of the United States Department of Agriculture showed 1940 receipts of $163,862,000 for all crops, up 14 per cent from last year's $143,896,000. Cotton easily defended its position as the state's No. 1 cash crop with a total staple and seed value of $58,144,000, nearly $7,000,000 better than last year. Corn brought $31,857,000 against last year's $26,598,000.

Although cotton contributed the bulk of the $20,000,000 boost, peanuts made the most spectacular showing on a percentage basis. They brought growers $17,715,000 this year against $11,261,000 last year and passed tobacco in total value for the first time in recent years.

Tobacco was the only major crop bringing a smaller total than in 1939, slipping 2.5 per cent from $12,650,000 to $12,328,000. There was an acreage reduction in tobacco of 43 per cent but increased yield per acre and higher price per pound held the revenue decline to a relatively small figure. With the exception of sugar cane, sorghum, sirup, sweet potato and soybeans all the 20 major food and feed crops showed production increases and in most instances the increase was due to higher yield per acre rather than to increased acreage.

The dollar value per acre was highest for tobacco with an average of $170.98, contrasted with only $100.32 in the previous season. Irish potatoes were next in per acre rating at $67.11 against $57 last year.

INCREASE IS ADVOCATED IN SWINE PRODUCTION.

TIFFIN, Ga., Dec. 28.—(AP)—Georgia today produces approximately 1,500,000 hogs annually, and "it is generally thought that this number could be well increased," Byron L. Southwell, of the Coastal Plain Experiment Station, says in a booklet outlining a new plan for economical swine production.

First, says Southwell, as near 100 per cent as possible of the feed consumed by hogs should be produced on the farm. Crops should be "hogged off" rather than harvested and fed in dry lot or otherwise, and swine should be fed the grain they will clean up twice per day.

A mineral mixture should be kept before the sows and pigs, the livestock experts adds.

Discussing breeding, Southwell says it is advisable generally to breed sows so they will farrow in March and September, although "the farmers in the lower part of south Georgia would probably find it advantageous to have sows farrow in January and July, and those in central Georgia in April and October."

The winter advocates a clean water supply and sanitary living conditions for successful swine raising. "Growing pigs should be kept out of branches, swamps, permanent pastures and away from older hogs," he says, "and it is recommended that a strip one to three feet wide be plowed on the fence surrounding the field being hogged off. Provide a rubbing post wrapped with burlap bags saturated with crank case oil in each field to control lice."

The old-fashioned mud-hole is taboo in modern raising of swine, experts states. He advises that pigs be double treated for cholera before they are weaned, and says weaned pigs should be developed as fast as possible.

Mrs. Matthews Dies In Her 90th Year

Mrs. L. C. Matthews, 89, of 907 Peachtree, N. E., died yesterday at her residence.

She is survived by two daughters, Mrs. N. L. Davis and Mrs. Katherine Zachry, of Atlanta; a son, F. E. Matthews, of Arlington, Va.; two sisters, Mrs. T. L. Brooks, of Atlanta, and Mrs. Frank Durpes, of California.

Services will be held in Peachtree chapel at 3:30 o'clock this afternoon, with Dean Raimundo de Ovies officiating. Burial will be in West View cemetery.

Homer T. Powell's Rites To Be Today

Funeral services for Homer T. Powell, 39, an internal revenue agent of Smyrna, who died Thursday in a local hospital, will be held at 2 o'clock this afternoon at the chapel of Harry G. Poole.

Dr. Pierce Harris will officiate. Burial will be in Crest Lawn cemetery.

Surviving are his wife; a daughter, Carolyn Powell; a son, Homer T. Powell Jr.; his parents, Mr. and Mrs. O. J. Powell, and a brother, Grady Powell, of Smyrna.

Mrs. Hardman, 67, Dies; Rites Today

Mrs. W. H. Hardman, 67, of 464 Ashby street, died at her residence yesterday.

She is survived by her husband; one sister, Mrs. Nannie L. Harris, and two brothers, the Rev. O. T. Moncrief, of St. Augustine, Fla., and N. J. Moncrief, of Chattanooga, Tenn.

Funeral services will be held at 2 o'clock this afternoon at the chapel of Awtry & Lowndes, with the Rev. T. T. Davis officiating. Burial will be at West View cemetery.

Other Special Programs Will Be Given in Atlanta Today.

Atlanta churches will hold New Year's services and other special programs today.

Dr. Charles Sheldon, Atlanta missionary to China, will preach in the Capitol View Presbyterian church at 11 o'clock on missionary conditions in the Orient. Dr. Sheldon returned to Atlanta two weeks ago from his mission station in China because of the critical conditions in the Far East.

New Year's service will be held at the Warren A. Candler Methodist church at 11 o'clock. The pastor, the Rev. Herman Allison, will bring a special message on "The New and Irretraceable Way" and Miss Mary Quigley is to be guest violinist.

Dr. H. B. Trimble, dean of the Candler School of Theology, will give a special New Year's service at Glenn Memorial church. The Rev. Milton Richardson, assistant rector of St. Luke Episcopal church, will speak at the Vesper service in the "Little Chapel" of the church at 5 o'clock.

Dr. Rogers To Preach.
Dr. Wallace Rogers, district superintendent of the West Atlanta district, will preach at the Cascade Methodist church in the presence of the pastor, who, with his wife and son, is spending the holidays in St. Petersburg, Florida.

Druid Hills Presbyterian church will dedicate its new pulpit Bible at the morning service. It is the gift of Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Teaford, in memory of their parents. This evening, the Rev. W. M. Elliott will deliver the second in a series on advertising slogans. Topic tonight is "The Pause That Refreshes."

The annual "Student Night" services of the Druid Hills Baptist church will be held at 7:30 o'clock tonight, with the following students participating: Helen Louise Thrash, R. L. Hope school; Joe Kelley, Bass Junior High school; Frances Stone, Girls' High school; Henry Carter, Emory at Oxford; Z. A. Snipes Jr., Alabama Polytechnic Institute; Emma Sue Chandler, Stephens College; Anne Gellerstedt, Agnes Scott; Edwin Johnston, Mercer; Martha Eunice Duggan, Bessie Titt, and Gerald Martin, Emory.

Heard To Be Ordained.

W. H. Heard, deacon in the Inman Park Baptist church, will be ordained to the ministry in the morning service of the church. The pastor, the Rev. S. F. Lowe, will deliver the ordination sermon on the subject, "The Task of the Modern Minister." Heard, who is the son of the late Rev. C. G. Heard, of Locust Grove, will preach his first sermon at Inman Park tonight, and will return to his studies at the Southern Baptist Seminary in Louisville tomorrow.

The Rev. Charles F. Schilling will celebrate Holy Communion at the morning service of the Church of Our Savior. It will be his last service before he leaves for St. Augustine, Florida, where he has accepted a call to become rector of Trinity Episcopal church.

The Rev. Horace Dunn, of Waukegan, Illinois, pastor of the C-ape street Christian church and former associate pastor with the Rev. A. C. Peacock at the Grant Park Christian church, will be guest speaker at the Grant Park church at the morning service.

Lakeview Heights interdenominational church has elected J. Shell Cochran chairman of the board for the coming year, it was announced yesterday. Other officers are: Z. W. Howell, vice chairman; W. B. Spurlock, treasurer, and Luther W. Smith, secretary. The Rev. H. E. McBrayer will continue to serve as pastor.

Druid Hills Methodist church will hold a special "Student Recognition Day" service at 7:30 o'clock tonight, and all college students are especially invited. Taking part on the program are: Anne Armstrong, of Sophie Newcomb; Lillia Lake, of Wesleyan, and James Clark, of Emory.

L. A. Ellison Dies; Funeral Set Tomorrow

Atlanta, 85, Was Builder of Oil Mills in South.

Leon A. Ellison, 85, died last night at the residence of his daughter, Mrs. B. A. J. Sells, of 779 Cascade avenue, S. W.

He had been retired for about 20 years, but formerly constructed oil mills all over the south. He was a native of Fayetteville, and had lived in Atlanta more than 50 years. He was a member of the West End Presbyterian church.

Surviving are three daughters, Mrs. Sells, Mrs. C. B. Smith, of Atlanta, and Mrs. C. Dean Smith, of Savannah.

Funeral services will be held at 11:30 tomorrow morning at Spring Hill, with the Rev. Harry B. Wade officiating, assisted by Dr. William C. Robinson. Burial will be in West View cemetery.

J. N. Dixon, 34, Former Ball Player, Dies

One-Time Waycross Resident Succumbs in Washington.

Special to THE CONSTITUTION.
WAYCROSS, Ga., Dec. 28.—Funeral services for J. N. "Slim" Dixon, 34, formerly of Waycross, who died Thursday at a hospital in Washington, D. C., were held this afternoon at the home of his father, J. B. Dixon, and his sister, Mrs. A. Aspinwall, conducted by Dr. D. V. Cason, assisted by the Rev. Albert S. Trulock and the Rev. H. Lester Dixon.

Mr. Dixon, originally of Pierce county, lived in Waycross for several years, where he was connected with the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad, before his removal to Washington about 10 years ago. He was well known in south Georgia as a baseball player, having been a member of the pitching staff of the Waycross Coast Liners in the Bright Leaf Tobacco League.

Besides his father he is survived by three brothers, D. F. "Doc" Dixon, of Mershon; Percy "Lefty" Dixon, of Patterson, and Jimmy P. Dixon, of Washington, all of whom are well known in amateur and professional baseball circles, and a sister, Mrs. A. Aspinwall, of Waycross.

Sam H. Willson Succumbs Here At Age of 52

World War Veteran Was Connected With Construction.

Sam H. Willson, 52, Atlanta district manager for the Kalman Floor Company, died at the Veterans' hospital yesterday after an illness of two months.

Willson was a native of Pennsylvania, attended school in Illinois, and was a graduate of the University of Pennsylvania. He served in France during the World War and was gassed during action.

After the war he established himself as an architect in Chicago, and later moved to Minneapolis, where he lived for a number of years. He had lived in Atlanta since 1928. His residence was at 232 12th street, N. E.

Willson has been connected with many major building projects in the southeast.

Surviving are his wife; two brothers, Daniel Willson, of Coatesville, Pa., and Norman Willson, of Hollywood, Cal.

The body will be taken to Minneapolis for burial. Brandon-Bond-Condor are in charge of arrangements.

NEW YORK, Dec. 28.—(AP)—Diversified buying kept the bond market slanting forward today in the fastest Saturday trade in more than a year.

Rails made the best showing as they rode a year-end rising price curve. Utilities, some of which started hesitantly, gained momentum and closed near the session's top marks.

U. S. government and foreign dollar loans showed less unanimity.

Gains of 10-32 point in U. S. Treas. were balanced by losses of 4-32.

Turnover of $9,860,600, fact value, latest since September 9, 1939, compared with $4,303,400 a week ago.

Santa Comes Even to Bad Little Monkeys

Quiet, Newcomer to Zoo, Has a Kind Word for No One.

Christmas comes to all who wait—and wait long enough, even if they aren't good all year. A more pugnacious, noisy and mean little monkey than Quito, a newcomer to the zoo, can't be found. But he got his Santa Claus—three days late.

This small, brindled monkey came to Atlanta two weeks ago, a gift of Frank Foley, of Columbus. And he has no Christmas spirit. He'll bite a hole through your fingernail and never flinch. He's energetic. His white teeth which are sharpened to a needle-point will snap you at the slightest provocation.

Keeper Dilbeck said "Quito didn't get much Christmas 'cause he was bad all year." The reason's right, but he did get a nice visit from the bewhiskered old gent of Yuletide. Now he wears a red knitted sweater, a snug, warm garment—when enough men hold him and put it on him. And he plays with a rubber ball and rubber bone. These are his gifts from Santa.

LOOKIE, QUIETO—Little Dorothy Biggers, of Spartanburg, tried to get Quito to play with his Christmas presents yesterday but, instead, he screamed at the top of his voice and bit a hole in his keeper's fingernail. The little monkey had a nice visit from Santa Claus even though it was late and he was a bad monkey.

J. L. Ballenger Named Boy Scout Executive

Joe L. Ballenger, assistant Scout executive of the Atlanta Area Council, Boy Scouts of America, has been elected executive of the Suwanee River Council, with headquarters in Tallahassee, Fla., and will assume his new duties January 5. He has been connected with the Atlanta council for the past 13 years. Ballenger served as camp director of Bert Adams camp during the summers of 1938, 1939 and 1940, and he has been instrumental in directing the Cub program here. The Cub enrollment has grown from about 200 to nearly 1,100.

1,230,000,000 Bushels Seen For '41 Wheat

500,000,000 Predicted as Surplus; Exports To Be Small.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 28.—(UP)—A record 1941 American wheat supply of 1,230,000,000 bushels—providing a 500,000,000-bushel surplus—was forecast by the Agriculture Department tonight.

Supplies from the 1940 crop were estimated at 1,100,000,000 bushels. That was an increase of 25,000,000 bushels over the estimate of a month ago. The increase, it was explained, was due to an upward revision of 1940 production.

Unlike the first World War, when export demand sent American wheat prices to $2.50 a bushel, agricultural economists said that little export demand appears probable. Exports, including shipments to United States possessions, this year will be from 20,000,000 to 25,000,000 bushels, they said.

Problems Loom.

There were 300,000,000 bushels of wheat in bins and elevators when the 1940 wheat harvest of 816,698,000 bushels was begun. Domestic consumption of wheat for the year was estimated at 685,000,000 bushels.

The prospective 1941 bumper wheat supply poses two problems. It would make a referendum on marketing quotas virtually mandatory. Growers would be called on to vote before July 1 on holding sales within quotas established by the department.

Storage Inadequate.

The second problem would be storage space for such a supply. A large portion of the crop—if quotas were voted—probably would go into government loans, thus leaving the department with the problem of finding storage space.

The world wheat supply probably will be 62,000,000 bushels larger in 1941 than this year as a result of increased production in Argentina, Australia and the United States, the department said. Supplies excluding Soviet Russia and China, were estimated at 5,536,000,000 bushels.

U. S. Fascism Called Better Than Defeat

Political Science Head Calls for Guarantee of Jobs.

CHICAGO, Dec. 28.—(AP)—Professor Robert C. Brooks, president of the American Political Science Association, told its convention today that victory "even by an American Fascist government" would be better than defeat by a foreign Fascist power and advocated a constitutional amendment guaranteeing all adult citizens "employment at living wages."

Brooks, professor of political science at Swarthmore College, asserted in his written presidential address that the United States faces a "future of military preparation and perhaps of war."

"It may fall to the lot of an American president to say, as did Prime Minister Winston Churchill, that he has 'nothing to offer but blood, toil, tears and sweat,'" he declared.

Averting that a "far worse future" might "easily be brought down upon our heads," he said Americans "will not enter the dark marked 'appeasement'—they will go out the opposite door marked 'defiance.'"

"It do not pretend to like the sort of future that confronts us. It may bring with it the heaviest burdens, the most cruel sacrifices. In all probability things will get worse before they get better.

"Peace and justice may not be for our time but we have the privilege to risk everything that they shall not perish from the earth."

Olivier, Leigh Board Liner For England

Movie Actor Will Offer His Services to Britain.

NEW YORK, Dec. 28.—(UP)—London isn't the safest place in the world but it's home to Laurence Olivier and Vivien Leigh, so they boarded the American export liner Exambion today to return to England via Lisbon.

The British film couple flew from Hollywood this week. Miss Leigh explained their reason for going back.

"I know," she said, "that London is not the safest place in the world right now, but it is still our home and that's where we want to be."

Olivier said he felt he couldn't "keep away any longer" and would offer his services to the British government "for whatever they think I can do."

Wheat at Chicago Advances Sharply

CHICAGO, Dec. 28.—(AP)—Wheat prices rose a cent or more a bushel today to the best level in about three weeks on the support of buying stimulated by strength of securities and demand attributed to consuming interests.

This extended the net gain for the week from 2 to almost 3 cents. The close was 1/4 higher than yesterday, with May 87-8 1/2 and July 81-1/2. Corn gained 1/4 cent, closing at 62-1/2 for May and 62-1/2 for July, showing a net advance of almost 2 cents for the week.

Oats closed 1/4 higher, soybeans 1 1/4 up, rye 1/4 up and lard 10-15 higher.

No material increase in flour business could be confirmed, but brokers expressed belief consuming interests may have participated with investors in the buying either to lift hedges or afford protection against prospective requirements.

That Which Is Real

If this impermanent planet we call earth should dissolve, overnight, into fleeting vapor, there would yet survive the only important factor of humankind. For it is the things of the spirit that are real; all things material are but fancies and shall, in due course, pass away.

The material world can inflict upon man no worse fate than death which is, in truth, but a beginning. Death is only the door to greater understanding and to infinite opportunity for the spirit.

Who, then, shall fear the might of earthly force? Who shall cower before the brutality of conquerors of the material? Who, knowing the greatness of the spirit, shall do aught but laugh in the face of foes whose impotent hands can bring death only to the body of flesh, can never touch the impregnable soul of man?

"While we look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen: for the things which are seen are temporal; but the things which are not seen are eternal."

There is a nation, a potentially great nation, which today has forgotten, sneered at, the real things of the spirit and has given all its allegiance to temporal force. The name of that nation is Germany.

By force it has brought many innocent lands to their knees; by force it has sent its goose-step strutters to hold other nations in relentless grip.

By ruthless use of force it has destroyed many lovely objects of man's genius. It has turned great cathedrals into heaps of smoking rubble and it has blasted into dust untold thousands of peaceful homes.

It has showered death upon the innocent and brought suffering and privation to the helpless. It has steeped the heart of humanity in sorrow and has known neither pity nor reverence for age nor for youth, for womanhood nor for the weak.

But what has it achieved, in those things that matter?

Has it destroyed the spirit that is Norway, the beauty that is France? Has it wiped from history and from memory the heroism that is Belgium or the courage that is Poland? The lines of concrete and of steel may break and crumble before the legions of Nazidom but all their power, all their treachery, all their brutality are powerless to change one iota of the inheritance of the weakest son of a free race.

Today the vultures of the Nazi are spewing their eggs of destruction and of death over the lovely land that is England. Today their profane ambition envisages future generations of British men and women enslaved in chains, chattels of German masters.

They may continue to wreck the material home of England. They have utterly destroyed the loveliness that was the Cathedral of Coventry and the altar in St. Paul's has known the desecration of their black capsules of death.

But there is an England, the real England, that is not of the temporal world. This England they can never touch. They may smash her cathedrals, but the souls of men of which those cathedrals are but the earthly manifestation are beyond their reach.

Perhaps, a few short years ago, this England was too much concerned, herself, with the material things of life. Took too much stock in visible glory and achievement.

But Nazidom has performed, for England, a tremendous service, a service whose value can never be computed on earth. For the temporal suffering, the material destruction that Nazi bombers have brought, has reawakened England's knowledge of her own soul.

They may destroy all things material on the little island of Britain. They may, even, bring death to half a generation.

But there is a spirit that has lived since time immemorial, a spirit that contains all the courage, the beauty and the faith that has animated the souls of Englishmen since first there was an England.

That spirit can never die. All the dictators of all the worlds are powerless before it. It is something real, something that will continue even after earth has run its predestined course. For it is of the things unseen, which are the only real things.

A list of correspondence school courses now available includes one in the taming of wild animals. One stares Leo fearfully in the eye until the postman rings.

The First Orders

A foretaste of what is to come, if the United States commits itself to a policy of appeasement of Hitler and the Nazis, has been vouchsafed this country within the past couple of weeks.

We have received a couple of blunt orders from Berlin, with the distinct threat that, if we don't obey, the Germans will come over and spank us in a manner we won't like.

The first came when Hitler spokesman told us, through a press interview, if we dared to permit interned vessels in our ports to be transferred for British use, we'd be sorry. That was the literal meaning of his language, though it was couched in more subtle terms.

Now comes the second order. We are told not to repeal the neutrality act, that if we do we will incur Nazi displeasure.

The first order was primarily addressed to the executive branch of our government, to the President. The second tells the congress of the United States what it must not do.

Pleasant, isn't it, to receive instructions on the management of our own affairs, from Berlin?

After we have obeyed these first two orders, if we do, there will undoubtedly be others. We shall probably be told to discontinue making planes and supplies of war for Britain. Then, probably, there will be instructions to discontinue our own defense program because, forsooth, it constitutes an unfriendly attitude to the mighty German race.

One order at a time, one humble act of obedience, on our part, after another and it will not be long before we are servilely carrying out the orders of Berlin, no matter how far-fetched they may be.

It is the familiar pattern of Nazi diplomacy, the use of threats and the assumption of power to dictate the policies of an independent nation.

One thing, though, Hitler does not seem to realize. That is, it is America with whom he now deals. Americans are not accustomed to taking orders from foreign dictators.

In the Chicago opera's presentation of "Carmen" a city mounted cop rides on the stage. Out of habit, the audience backs up five rows.

Those Were the Days!

Keepers of vital statistics inform us that the longevity of the American man is increasing. The increasing tempo of modern life has not been sufficiently lethal to offset the advantages of improved medicine, saner habits of life, more exercise and longer youth.

One other factor in increasing the average span of life must be saner habits of eating. Compared with the gay and gluttonous Nineties the dinner table customs of modern man may seem puny, but they are far more healthful. Far fewer men of today are digging their graves with their teeth.

Think, for instance, of the years taken off the life of the man who ate, for a normal dinner, the following authentic individual supply of gastronomic tidbits: a dozen saddlecock oysters, a large broiled lobster and a dozen roast baby lamb chops. With, of course, the corresponding accessories in the way of vegetables, drinks and desserts.

Nowadays an eight-ounce steak is a large meal. Fifty years ago a three-pound steak was an appetizer. Nowadays a cocktail, a few sips of wine and a demitasse supply all the liquid required. When Diamond Jim Brady set the styles a quart of champagne was only a tasty touch to a nine-course dinner.

Those may have been the good old days, but a modern man lives longer, even though he may get indigestion merely from reading of the trenchermen of old.

When Greek meets Greek, one asks the other, "which way did he go?"

The Hens of France

French hens, progenitors of a long line of famous French dishes, must indeed be squirming under the German occupation if a refugee's comment that the Nazis have a hand ready to catch each egg as it is laid, is true.

The hens of France are proud creatures, well knowing that in normal times each product not returned to the nest for future generations is treated almost with veneration and sent to the table delightfully implemented with every art of a kitchen genius for the titillation of the gastronomic senses of a nation of gourmands and epicures.

To have a rude Nazi hand waiting for the egg laid for the sons and daughters of La Belle France must indeed be a disheartening servitude for the chicken of the occupied lands. But nature being what it is, what can a hen do?

ONE WORD MORE

By RALPH MCGILL.

"UNCLE SHYLOCK" A few days ago Captain Eddie Rickenbacker, the distinguished hero of World War One, said in a speech that no matter who won the war, we were in for difficult days with many of our ordinary ways of life sure to pass.

We are about to finance another world war in the belief that our own salvation is bound up in its outcome. There is no way to escape the fact we are vitally concerned.

This country, and England, has to finance a war. We pay for it with cash. The German method is to pay for it with money which means nothing outside Germany. It doesn't have to mean anything outside so long as it can buy something in Germany. And Germany controls all her industry. The chief goes in the Hitler set-up are getting their profits but no one else is making anything.

A half-baked young man wrote in a few days ago saying that two American automobile plants in Germany were helping to arm Hitler and why didn't the newspapers tell the story. He should have known, had he thought, that those plants long ago were taken over by the government and that the owners have no more to do with them. Sadie Glutz, who clerks in the five and ten. Germany is working long hours and the workers are being paid in German scrip. So long as it can buy food, they consider it as good money. They can't quit and they can't strike.

It was after World War One that England began calling us "Uncle Shylock" because we asked for payments on the debt. We didn't like it when the late Neville Chamberlain balanced his budget by the simple expedient of removing the debt to the United States from the British budget. Now, we are going to have to finance the world again and we will have to do it because our own destiny is bound up in the world affairs.

THE COST OF WAR War costs more than anything else. You can build a nice, modest little cottage for what one airplane bomb costs. And, with that in mind, it is easy to understand how a war can cost England $20,000,000 per day, all things figured in.

We go into Round Two of the war to make the world safe for democracy not nearly so able to pay for a war as we were the first one.

In August, 1914, when World War One started in Europe, the United States had a debt of but $1,188,235,400.

When we got into the war in 1917, the debt still was less than $2,000,000,000. Within three months after entering the war the debt began to approach $3,000,000,000.

That war cost us an estimated $30,000,000,000. Since then we have added an estimated $12,000,000,000 in pensions, bonuses other incidentals, making the cost of that war about $42,000,000,000.

The national debt substantially was reduced during the boom period after the war, but the depression, which lasted longer than our part in the war and put more persons out of jobs and on relief than we had in the army, came along and the national debt now is about $50,000,000,000.

We now have begun to spend $17,000,000,000 on war preparations and defense. It is well understood this is but the first of such appropriations. We will have to spend much more than that. If we get into the war, even to the extent of voiding our neutrality and conveying our own ships, and if we finance and, as apparently we must, then it is not unlikely this war may cost us $100,000,000,000.

If so, and if Germany or England wins, we will get no part of it back and we will be forced into a more controlled economy than we have dreamed may come. That was what Captain Rickenbacker had in mind.

ENGLAND'S PREDICAMENT England had, at the start of the War No. 1, a debt estimated to be $3,500,000,000.

When War Number 2 began, the debt was estimated at $40,000,000,000. This did not include the amount owed the United States, which was a paltry $5,000,000,000 or thereabouts.

The population of England is about one-third of the United States and so it readily may be seen what the debt load is on the individuals in that country. The load is increasing at the rate of an approximate $20,000,000 per day.

That is why England already is beginning to need cash or credits, which are one and the same.

And, eventually, someone has to get Hitler in his own territory. If that isn't in the plans, then we might as well have a negotiated peace right now instead of going on spending money and men. All this isn't pleasant. But, now and then, I like to give myself the real medicine and not take all of the war talk in bands, fine speeches and relief drives.

SILHOUETTES.

By RALPH T. JONES.

But One Hope

For Italians.

It is rather strange, in one sense, but utterly inevitable in another, that the only hope for the salvation of the Italian people now depends upon victory for Britain.

Aside from France, the Italians, as a people, are rapidly becoming the most pitied victims of a power struggle of the world. This situation, while aggravated by the victories of the Greeks and the British in Albania and Africa, was inevitable from the first day that Mussolini formed his unholy alliance with Hitler.

It doesn't matter, for the immediate future, whether Italy is completely defeated by Britain and her allies, or whether the Axis powers come out of the war on top. In either case, the Italian people cease to be an independent nation and go completely under the thumb of Germany. They couldn't be worse off if they were to fight a losing war with the Nazis.

If Italian morale collapses, if the Italian people arise in outraged fury against Mussolini and the Fascists, it simply means Germany will take over the country. "To restore and maintain order," the old alibi.

If Italy does not collapse, if the Axis triumphs, the Italians will still be mere puppets under German masters, their country merely an appendage to the Nazi juggernaut.

Fit the poor Italians, whatever the outcome. If Duce Benito has led his country into an impasse so dark he will go down in history as the most wretched conspirator for his own country's downfall in the history of Europe.

Should Pray
For British Victory.

If only all Italians knew and understood the situation, they would be praying today for British victory, even over their own armies. For the only hope for freedom for Italy, for France and for the other enslaved countries of Europe, lies in British victory.

It is, of course, also true that the only hope of future freedom for the duped German peoples lies likewise in British victory.

The dictators are wise to keep close watch on the situation and information. For, if the truth of the world situation once became general knowledge among Italians and Germans alike, there would be no further need of British war against either. There would be such an arising of the outraged populations that all the gesticulation in the world wouldn't be able to save Adolf and Benito from a horrible, but justly deserved, fate.

Some day that knowledge is going to penetrate past the ramparts of censorship. And when it does—

A Letter

From Canada.

Read a letter the other day, written to a friend here by a Canadian in British Columbia. It was long and all of it was interesting. However, there was one thought expressed of unusual interest.

He said that, at the outbreak of the war, Canada didn't wake up to the necessity for all-out effort. During those almost forgotten days of quietude, when we called it "phony war," the Canadians had not realized how serious the situation was. It took Dunkirk and the collapse of France to really arouse them, he said.

But now, he added, they are pouring everything they have into the war effort. Not all are yet engaged in war work, for it takes time to build and to organize, but as fast as humanly possible, Canadian power and strength of every kind is going into the determination to win the war quickly.

He said he believed public opinion in the United States was somewhat like it had been in Canada in those early stages of the war. But that we, too, were waking up and the time was nearing when all America north of the Rio Grande would be giving everything it had to assure defeat of Germany.

He added a regret that he, and others, had not yet been called upon to really sacrifice. Sacrifice such a cause he felt, would be good for all of us.

Another interesting part of his letter dealt with the possibility that Japan might actively join with Germany and Italy and, if so, he rather expects an attempt by the Japanese to slip an airplane carrier across the Pacific to do a little air bombing of the Canadian cities in the west. Not that such a foray could have any effect on the outcome of the war, but for the psychological effect in Japan of telling the people the yellow bombers are actually attacking the white men in their homes.

His own city, he added, was taking precautions against such a possible air attack, already. Food for thought, for us.

Text and Pretext

By M. ASHBY JONES.

When the Angels Went Away. I am thinking about the story we are all reading last Wednesday morning, of the visit of the angels to earth, with all the beautiful light and music. The story says that after they had finished their song the angels went away, taking with them the beautiful light and music. That is the trouble about angels. They always go away. They are only visitors, daintily touching the earth with their shining sandals for a glorious moment, then leaving it dark and silent.

So we human beings are naturally skeptical about these angels, who break in upon our everyday experiences with their sensational songs and stars, and in the shadowed silence of the aftermath of these Christmas experiences, we raise some practical questions. Were they really angels, and did the music and the light really come from heaven above? Did they leave anything heavenly on the earth when they went away?

These shepherds of our Christmas story were very practical men. They remembered the angels had told about something which had happened in Bethlehem—that their "glad tidings" could be found "on earth." So they left their sheep and hurried away to "see this thing that is come to pass."

They went to Bethlehem, and put to the test the truth of this visit of the angels. And I am convinced that this is a fair and wholesome test to put to any message which claims to come from heaven. If it is a divine truth it must have somewhere a birth, and where it can be born into human terms. If it is a heavenly star it must pause above some stable where its radiant light reveals a cradle.

"On Earth." Yes, every heavenly message must have its earthly sign—every divine truth its human vocabulary. Indeed, this is the test whether it is a heavenly vision or a divine revelation. The true artist who beholds within his soul a vision of beauty must carve it into marble or translate it into color upon canvas. He who hears the mingled melodies from far-off spirit land, must combine them into a symphony and translate them into tone. He who is thrilled with a great truth, or possessed with a burning passion, must find an utterance for his passion and a vocabulary for his thought.

Let us be sure that one who has talked with God will be able to speak clearly and helpfully to men. Moses came down from the presence of God bearing the table of the law, which became the foundation of the jurisprudence of men. Paul saw the beckoning of a Macedonian in a midnight vision, and the next day crossed the Aegean sea with a message for the lost civilizations of the East. Jesus came down from the Mount of Transfiguration with healing power for the poor demoniac.

We may well doubt the truth of any experience which claims to be heavenly if it cannot get itself wrought into human helpfulness. A religious experience which cannot bear the light of day is not heavenly. So angels who leave no signs at Bethlehem, have no message worth the hearing of men. The essence of the Christian message is, "the Word became flesh"—the invisible became visible—Love was translated into the language of life.

Sign of a Cradle. So now after Christmas day, because the lights on the trees have gone out, and the carols have faded into silence, is Christmas over? Are we tempted to say to another, it was just a very pretty tradition. There were no real angels, and the natal star is all a myth? Now is really the time to go to Bethlehem "to see this thing which has happened."

If the shepherds had not gone there and found a little baby in a cradle, the angels' song would never have been heard by another generation, and the radiance of the natal star would have faded forever into oblivion. Now is the time to learn the real significance of the story told by the shepherds.

For this cradle of Bethlehem has a significance which no other cradle ever had. Here a new definition is given of the divine, and a new revelation is made of a man. Out of that cradle grew the most perfect expression of manhood the world has ever seen, and out of that cradle came the clearest revelation of God. Here is linked heaven and earth—here is harmonized the human and the divine.

Here is the only hope for the peace of the world. He is to be the peace of mankind. Because the closer men come to that cradle, the closer they come to each other. Here is to be the rendezvous of the race. Is it not suggestive that first the humble shepherds took the infant, and then the wise men of the east on benedict knees present their gifts. The approach is from a thousand different points of experience, but the way is the same—the way of love.

The armies of the world must pass this way before they beat their swords into ploughshares. He is to be the peace of the world, peace can be permanent. The peace of policy is cowardice and dishonor. A commercial peace is only the pause and poise of the tiger before his spring. Peace based upon love is the only enduring peace. So turning from the Christmas songs and lights, let us go into Bethlehem, and see this thing that has happened."

Cafes Get Curfew.

Cafes, bars and other night life places in Tokyo, Japan, must observe a new curfew. The Japanese home ministry recently decreed 11 p. m. as the official closing time, but plans to move it forward to 10 p. m. have just been announced.

Christmas, 1932—and 1940

By DOROTHY THOMPSON.

There was a kind of brilliant glamor over Europe that year, although in the back of our minds we sensed it as euphoria: the sudden flush of health before death or the preternatural calm before storm.

Something had drawn us back to Europe, and I had dragged the family toward Austria. One last winter in Austria before—

To be near Vienna and yet in the country induced us to take a chalet in the mountains, two hours away—one of those half-timbered Austrian houses, with deep, overhanging eaves, carved wooden balconies and a first story of plaster and stone. There were the three of us and my sister and her little girl; quite a family. The place was something of a winter resort, and near by was a hotel, to which, for overflow guests, was attached a villa large enough to accommodate 20 or more guests.

BETTER FRIENDS

AT PARTY'S END

When we rented the villa for a week and invited that potpourri of American and European friends to spend Christmas with us, we hardly thought that they would all accept. They came from Germany and Hungary, from England and from spots in between. They were married and unmarried and engaged to be married. There were children and nurses, and every bed in the chalet was taken. Many of them had never met each other before.

They were all highly individualized people. The party might have been a catastrophe. There were occasional moments when it seemed it might be. Political viewpoints varied from pretty far left to a very English Tory right. Yet together they represented a cross-section of an European and American world which was both representative and selective. Our guests were modestly representative of that civilization common to Europe and to America. We all spoke the same language, although with varying accents. We all believed in the same essential values. When the party broke up we were all better friends than we had been before.

The journalists among us—and there were several, all Americans—told us that this would be the last Christmas before Hitler. This disturbed us. No one thought he was underrating the drastic character of such a change. Some speculated learnedly about its nature. Yet, we all felt a certain detachment about it. We talked about it as though it were due to happen in history, or had happened a hundred years back or a hundred years ahead. We were intellectually concerned, but not personally.

ONE WOMAN

SAW FUTURE

Only one of the party, a German, a woman and an artist, who had nothing to do with politics, interrupted a quite nonpolitical conversation over lunch in one of those delightful remote mountain inns, which we had broken ourselves on skis and in sleighs. She pushed her glass of hot spiced wine away from her, and looked round on the gay crowd.

"There'll never be another Christmas like this one!" she cried. "It will never happen again. Four or five years from now perhaps we shall all hate each other. And we shall be scattered all over the earth. We are just the people who are going to be hit—don't you see it?"

"Why?" somebody asked.

"People with minds of their own," she answered. "By a roundabout route, I had a letter from her the other day. She is marooned in the south of France. She wanted to know whether there was any way, any route, by which I could send her a little money. She lacked money even for food. She could not go back to Germany—although she had never taken any political action in her life, and her race has never come into question. She just happened to have the wrong friends."

Greetings have reached me from one of us. He is in a British prison camp. He is a German, with a famous family name. He lived in England, for he couldn't stand the Nazis. But on the whole question as it involved Germany he couldn't quite make up his mind, my Hamlet friend. To be caught between two stools is to be interned. He writes:

"Thanks for the books. Thanks that you know I haven't changed. Don't worry about me. Millions are worse off. And—a Merry Christmas."

But the other German friend—the young one, the handsome one, the one we all liked best? He is in Germany, in a famous family name. He is in an important position there. When we think about him, we have a constricted feeling around the chest. How could he have changed? He, especially he. Didn't he say then—but it is better not to write what he said then. Funny, a few weeks ago I got a message. Not from him, but from him via her via him. Very short. "Sends love."

What a wonderful feeling. Maybe he has not changed. Certainly he has not changed. "Sends love."

SHE MARRIED

A POLE

Mary was the moodiest and the happiest. She was making up her mind to marry a Polish nobleman. She thought she was making it up, but we all knew she had already done so. She was very beautiful, very clever, and most romantically in love. She was married quite soon after the party, and went to live on an estate, and had children, and looked much more like a princess than most princesses ever do.

She called the other day. "It was lucky I was an American," she had letters from friends "Countess B"—has been transported to Turkestan. She is such a fine, gentle old lady. She lives in an unheated hut, with a mud floor. She has to work in the fields, dig with her bare hands. She will die. . . . Was it her fault she was born an aristocrat? If they wanted to take the estate—people don't care much about things like that any more . . .

but couldn't she have lived in the gardener's cottage? They were poor enough anyhow. But to be transported . . . to die in exile.

No one understands, and no one cares much, apparently, what has happened to the Poles. A million must have perished. A hundred thousand, at least, transported to Germany. They have to work 16 hours a day, and no wages. In Russian Poland, little A— is working in a brick kiln, her arms bent to the shoulders. She's 11 years old.

Mary's face looked bitter. I couldn't say, "And a Merry Christmas."

"WON'T RECOGNIZE ENGLAND"

McNeill Ousts Riggs; Grant Misses Top 10 First Time in 8 Years

U.S.L.T.A. Puts Frank Kovacs 3d, Hunt 4th

Frank Parker Drops to 5th But Makes First 10 for 8th Year.

NEW YORK, Dec. 28.—(AP)—Topping off a major upheaval in men's tennis ratings, the United States Lawn Tennis Association's ranking committee today named Donald McNeill and Alice Marble at the head of the nation's net lists.

McNeill, the Oklahoma City youngster who surprised the tennis world by taking the national championship from Bobby Riggs, of Chicago, last summer, headed a top-10 group in the men's division, which included only five of last year's ranking performers. Miss Marble, on the other hand, bade farewell to amateur tennis by receiving the leading women's position for the fifth straight year, and, for the second time in a row she and the California veteran, Helen Hull Jacobs, were placed one-two in the list.

The rankings, recommended by the U. S. L. T. A. committee and subject to approval by the Association convention February 8—an action which is regarded more or less automatic—showed only two newcomers who were not among last year's leading 10 women—Mrs. Gracyn Wheeler Kelleher, of Santa Monica, Cal., and Hope Knowles, of Philadelphia. They replaced Dorothy Worman, of San Francisco, and Katharine Winthrop, of Boston.

GRANT MISSED. In the men's lists, on the other hand, everything was changed. In addition to McNeill's rise from third to top spot and Riggs' drop to second, the rankings saw Betsy Grant, the Atlanta veteran, out of the first 10 for the first time in eight years; Gilbert Hunt, of Providence, R. I., failing to make it for the first time in three years; Welby Van Horn, of Los Angeles, the 1939 surprise, dropping from fourth to fifteenth; and Wayne Sabin, another Californian, who ran afoul of the U. S. L. T. A.'s eight-week "penalty" rule some time ago, falling from fifth right out of the first 20.

Third and fourth places went to two players returning to the rankings after a year's absence. They are Francis Kovacs II, of Oakland, Cal., and Joseph R. Hunt, of United States Naval Academy, Annapolis, Md. Frankie Parker dropped from second in '39 to fifth this year, making the top 10 for the eighth straight year and, with Grant's failure, thus becoming the "veteran" of the select group.

The "upsetting" youngsters who captured the national doubles title, John Kramer, of East Los Angeles, and Frederick Schroeder Jr., of Glendale, Cal., skyrocketed into the picture their first time out. Kramer took sixth place and Schroeder tenth.

PAULINE BETZ CLIMBS. Longest advances in the women's ranks were made by Pauline Betz, of Los Angeles, climbing from eighth to third, and Mrs. Kelleher, who was placed fifth in making the top 10 for the fifth time in six years. Mrs. Sarah Palfrey Cooke dropped from third to sixth and Helen Bernhard, of New York, fell from fourth to eighth.

The Kramer-Schroeder combination topped the men's doubles, trailed by McNeill and Parker. Robert Carrothers, of the Coronado (Cal.) High school, headed both the national interscholastic and national junior singles list. Robert Falkenberg, of Hollywood, Cal., topped the boys' singles, of Coronado, Cal., in doubles, led the girls' singles. In doubles, E. Victor Seixas Jr., and William T. Vogt, of Penn Charter school, Philadelphia, were first in the interscholastic competition; Carrothers and Douglas Woodbury, of Coronado, Cal., topped the boys' junior ranks; Falkenberg and Jim Brink, of Seattle, led the boys' division; and Doris Hart and Nellie Sheer, of Miami, Fla., paced the girls.

The ranking by divisions: MEN'S SINGLES—1, Donald McNeill, Oklahoma City; 2, Bobby Riggs, Chicago; 3, Francis L. Kovacs 2nd, Oakland, Cal.; 4, Joseph R. Hunt, United States Naval Academy; 5, John A. Kramer, East Los Angeles; 6, John A. Kramer, East Los Angeles; 7, Gardner Mulloy, Seattle; 8, Elwood T. Cooke, Portland, Ore.; 9, Frederick R. Schroeder Jr., Glendale, Cal.; 10, Bryan M. Grant Jr., Atlanta; 11, Harold Surface Jr., Kansas City; 12, Frank D. Guerin Jr., Orlando, Fla.; 13, Gilbert A. Hunt Jr., Providence, R. I.; 14, Welby Van Horn, Los Angeles; 15, William Talbert, Cincinnati; 16, Edward Alloo, Berkeley, Cal.; 17, Charles Oleswie, Santa Monica, Cal.; 18, Seymour Greenberg, Chicago; 19, George A. Tolley, Los Angeles.

MEN'S DOUBLES—1, Kramer and Schroeder; 2, McNeill and Parker; 3, Mulloy and Prusoff; 4, Robert Harman, Oakland, Cal.; and Charles Mattman, New York; 5, Guernsey and Russell Bobbitt, Atlanta; 6, Riggs and Van Horn; 7, Wilmer Allison and John Van Ryn, Dallas; 8, Kovacs and Edward Amark, San Francisco; 9, Kenneth Bartlett, Los Angeles; and William Reedy, Beverly Hills, Cal.; 10, James Wade, Los Angeles, and Laurence Dec, San Francisco.

WOMEN'S SINGLES—1, Alice Marble, Beverly Hills, Cal.; 2, Helen Hull Jacobs, Berkeley, Cal.; 3, Pauline Betz, Los Angeles; 4, Dorothy May Bundy, Santa Monica; 5, Mrs. Sarah Palfrey Cooke, Brookline, Mass.; 6, Virginia Wolfenden, San Francisco; 7, Helen Bernhard, New York; 8, Mary Arnold, Los Angeles; 9, Hope Knowles, Philadelphia; 10, Margaret Osborne, San Francisco; 11, Patricia Canning Allred, Los Angeles; 12, Lucille Dillingham, Los Angeles; 13, Margaret Starnes, Los Angeles; 14, Helen Pedersen, Stamford, Conn.; 15, Millie Birch, New York; 16, Norma Taubel, New York; 17, Louise Rayburn, Los Angeles; 18, Doris Hart, Miami; 19, Mrs. Martha Barnett Andrade, Miami; 20, Catherine Malcolm, Glendale, Cal.

INTER-SCHOLASTIC SINGLES—1, Robert Carrothers, Coronado (Cal.) High school; 2, Earl Cochell, Los Angeles High school; 3, E. Victor Seixas Jr., Penn Charter school.

Bosch was knocked out of bounds by Halfback Hoberg, No. 1 at extreme left is Roy Goree, while the California man lunging at Bosch is Stabber, an end, No. 52 at the right is Cowboy Buck Shaw. The little Tech star amazed fans with his ability to pass and run the soggy ball around the Bears.

Vols, Eagles Confident They'll Win New Year's

Tennessee Players Play Checkers, Talk Little of Contest; Boston College Stars Say Plenty While Working Vigorously.

NEW ORLEANS, Dec. 28.—(AP)—Both the Tennessee and Boston College football teams are supremely certain they will win the Sugar Bowl game January 1 but the difference in the way they display their confidence is amazing.

The Tennesseans, used to their own might after three unbeaten seasons and two previous bowl games, are reluctant to discuss the coming conflict as they go through their training paces at near-by Edgewater Park, Miss.

Courteous, calm and aloof—but not cocky—they sit around the hotel lobby playing checkers and talking little even among themselves.

But at their training quarters in Bay St. Louis, Miss., also on the Gulf coast, the Boston College Eagles are like schoolboys who have just heard the recess bell.

Their spare moments are crowded with mutual kidding and horseplay. They swarm through the town, stopping at cafes to tell the waitresses how pretty they are and crowd around the hotel desk trying to "date" the switchboard operator.

They'll talk about the game and predict sure victory, but boisterously and not arrogantly.

Typical of the difference in attitude was an exchange of remarks by the teams' respective All-Americans, Tennessee's Guard Bob Suffridge and Boston's Center Chet Gladchuk.

SWAP REMARKS. Asked how he liked the idea of playing opposite 235-pound Gladchuk, the 190-pound Suffridge stalled awhile trying to evade a direct answer, and in the course of doing so asked: "Where does he play?"

Told of this, Gladchuk declared without hesitation: "He'll darn soon find out where he plays."

In practice the Vols are serious, almost grim. They go through the most important work in strict secrecy with even Tennessee newspapermen and the university publicity director barred from the field.

The Eagles take the stiffest scrimmage in a spirit of fun, with jokes and jibes between every two plays. But when the ball is snapped they tear into each other with a vigor that keeps the trainer dashing onto the field to inspect a battered nose or bashed head.

Even the physical appearance is in contrast. The Tennesseans run to uniformity, with few men over 200 pounds and none very much over that. The Eagles vary from the towering 6 foot 5 Gladchuk and the corpulent 250-pound John Yaucoos to slight Charley O'Rourke and short Frank Mazznicki.

GREAT TEAMS. Both are great teams, with almost identical statistical records in their all-victorious 10-game seasons. Both have great coaches who are affable fellows and conform to tradition by calling each others' clubs the best in the country.

And there the similarity ends.

TENNIS TOURNAMENT. NASHVILLE, Tenn., Dec. 28.—(AP)—Strong indication that Louisville, Ky., may be awarded the Southern Lawn Tennis Association's 1941 tournament were given tonight by Pollard Parsons, association secretary.

Bears Engage All-Star Team In Pro Review

Game Today Is Third Annual Post Season 'Pro-Bowl' Affair.

LOS ANGELES, Dec. 28.—(AP)—The nation's picked professional football talent goes on review tomorrow. The National League All-Stars and the champion Chicago Bears meet in the third annual post-season "pro-bowl" game.

Directors of the game predicted that Gilmore stadium, the largest park available to the professionals, would be sold out, and that additional seats would be installed. The stadium seats 18,500. Profits go to charity.

Bears smashed the Washington Redskins by the unprecedented score of 73-0 for the National League crown earlier this month. The All-Stars team are four of those Redskins who were trampled by the Chicago machine—Sammy Baugh, Dick Todd, Jim Barber and "Wee Willie" Wilkin.

Ray Flaherty, the Washington coach who also is piloting the All-Stars, named Baugh and Barber on his starting team. Todd and Wilkin will see action.

Drills have indicated that the All-Star team has developed an attack based largely on Baugh's passing. The stars already were well acquainted with the Bears' offense. Chicago has a substantial weight advantage, with a line averaging 223-1-3 pounds, the backfield 197 and the team 214.

The All-Stars' line hits 214, the backfield 197 and the team 266.

Probable starting lineups, with game time at 2 p. m. (PST): CHI. BEARS—Pos. All-Stars, Plamen LT Kinard (Bkn. Dots), LG Bassi (Phila. Eagles), RG Oiderhaw (N.Y. Gats), RT Barber (Wash. Rns), RE Luskman (Chi. Bears), RB Luskman (Chi. Bears), QB P. Mander (Bkn. Dots), LT Kinard (Bkn. Dots), LG Bassi (Phila. Eagles), RG Oiderhaw (N.Y. Gats), RT Barber (Wash. Rns), RE Luskman (Chi. Bears), RB Luskman (Chi. Bears), QB P. Mander (Bkn. Dots).

ALL-STARS—Pos. All-Stars, Plamen LT Kinard (Bkn. Dots), LG Bassi (Phila. Eagles), RG Oiderhaw (N.Y. Gats), RT Barber (Wash. Rns), RE Luskman (Chi. Bears), RB Luskman (Chi. Bears), QB P. Mander (Bkn. Cereal Bowl Game At Kirkwood Park The University of Southern Kirkwood has selected the strong East Atlanta eleven as opponents in the annual Cereal Bowl classic, officials announced today.

This event is to be held at 2:30 p. m. at the stadium of University of Southern Kirkwood at Kirkwood park.

Kirkwood has never been defeated in a Cereal Bowl contest. A large crowd is expected to witness the battle.

8 YARDS PER TRY. Big Van Thompson, Volunteer tailback, is the leading ground-gainer for the Vols this year, averaging eight yards per carry.

Tech's Handling of Wet Ball In Mud Amazes Alexander

It will take a long dry spell to get Grant field in shape even for a regatta, but Coach W. A. Alexander showed no signs of worrying about the quagmire through which his Jackets munched to a 13-0 victory over California's big Bears.

"I believe we ought to flood the field before every game next year," the Old Man laughed. "Fumbling has been one of our main troubles all the year and I was astonished at the way our boys handled the ball out there in the mud."

The Jackets lost the ball only once on a fumble and that was near the Bear goal. On the other hand, they fell on California muffs like fly paper over a snail.

"We were very fortunate to hang onto loose balls," Alexander admitted, "and I still am wondering how it happened." He was particularly lavish in his praise of Johnny Bosch, who didn't know the ball was even damp; and Rob Ison and Hawk Cavette.

Coach Stub Allison, offering no alibis for his team's upset, called the Jackets "a wonderfully coached team, both in the line and backfield. We were beaten by a better ball team today."

Tharpe's Sou'wester, Hip Boots Provided 'Signs' for Tech Team

Sight of Coach's Whaling Costume May Have Inspired Sea-Going Tech Gridders.

By JOHN MARTIN.

Tech's Jackets go by the signs. That's how they beat the Golden Bears yesterday in the hog-wallow of Grant field.

Leave it to Mack Tharpe, the Beau Brummell of the coaching fraternity, to provide the signs.

Tharpe waded onto the field under cover of a flopping Sou'wester before the game. He was buried up to his hips in a pair of waders. His face was creased like the salted map of the true whaler. The wind was wrong and the rain was playing a time past his ears.

His slicker would have made a good tarpaulin for half of the field, or a sail for a whaling vessel.

Here was the true fisherman, in weather too wet for canvasbacks and the other hardy species of ducks, the Jackets reckoned.

All Tharpe needed to look the part of the best of trout fishermen in Georgia was a creel, a flyrod and a license. He had the costume and the river was there, right under his No. 12's.

So the Jackets took to the sign and through the ooze in which alligators and turtles would have glided, and over the waters that would have been paradise for catfish, they marched through to catch Bears.

Twice they cast and twice they struck. They couldn't have done better had they been riding a tractor with pontoons.

On the sidelines Whaler Tharpe bogged up and down in his hip-pies. His Sou'wester, he turned every tear of the wrathful rain gods.

It was time for the Jackets to go fishing. They did. But instead of a whale they came back with Bears. Which was good enough on a day like yesterday. Even for Whaler Tharpe, who dresses the part.

Fast Mercer Five To Resume Drills. MACON, Ga., Dec. 28.—(AP)—Resting on a definite decision reached recently as to Mercer University's continuance in college competition, those athletes who make up the 1940 Bear basketball aggregation will resume practice paces next Thursday, in preparation for the campaign inaugurated here January 6 with the Presbyterian College Blue Stockings.

In pre-Christmas drills, Coach Joe Dougherty admitted that the club which takes the court against the Clinton, S. C., eagles should be Mercer's most formidable entry in years.

A full five of lettermen have returned, headed by the sensationally smooth Herbert Norman, a prize product of Norman Junior College, Rex McVaine, ex-Gordon Military College all-around athlete, and Roger Nelson are back for forward flanks, to team up with Center Tom Heaton and Bill Culp, lanky guard.

College Tankmen Clash in Relays

FT. LAUDERDALE, Fla., Dec. 28.—(AP)—The nation's crack collegiate swimmers completed their drills today for the chief competitive event of the sixth international aquatic forum—the East-West relays here tomorrow.

For nearly a week eastern and western stars here for the forum have been brushing up their strokes and tonight coaches of both teams predicted a close race.

Bundy—will reach the United States next week. The United States players made a clean sweep of the four tournaments in which they participated.

Grant Defeats Irish Net Ace In Sugar Bowl

Sabin, Riggs, Kovacs, Mulloy, Surface Also Win Matches.

NEW ORLEANS, Dec. 28.—(AP) Bobby Riggs, of Chicago, starting his campaign to regain No. 1 national ranking which he lost last year to Don McNeill, went easily into the second round of the Sugar Bowl invitation tennis tournament today by beating Norman Brooks, of Los Angeles, 6-2, 3-6, 6-1.

Riggs, ranked second nationally, is seeded No. 1 in the absence of McNeill who beat Bobby in the finals here last year.

It was a far more serious Riggs than the clowning, playful racket-slinger of last year. Still, however, he took things easy and let a comparatively unknown opponent take a set.

Frankie Kovacs, of Oakland, Cal., seeded second, clowning his way into a hole, but settled down to win from Alex Guerry, of Seawane, Tenn., 11-9, 5-7, 7-5. Bryan "Bitty" Grant, of Atlanta, No. 3, scored the only straight set victory in the singles play when he beat George Lytleton Rogers, of Ireland, 6-2, 6-2.

Wayne Sabin, of Portland, Ore., ousted Charles Hare, of England, 7-9, 6-1, 6-4, and Gardner Mulloy, of Coral Gables, Fla., finished off the foreign contingent by eliminating Ladislav Hecht, of Czechoslovakia, 1-6, 6-2, 6-3.

Earl Bartlett, of New Orleans, won, 6-3, 2-6, 6-1, from Mike McLaney, of New Orleans, who was subbed for Jack Kramer, of East Los Angeles, ill with a bad cold. Ted Schroeder, of Glendale, Cal., eliminated Billy McGehee, of New Orleans, 6-3, 0-6, 8-6. Hal Surface, of Kansas City, beat Ed Alloo, of Berkeley, Cal., 5-7, 6-1, 6-4.

In the doubles Schroeder and Kramer took Rogers and Guerry, 6-4, 6-1; Grant and Surface defeated McGehee and Bartlett, 6-4, 3-6, 8-6; Riggs and Sabin beat Hecht and Hare, 3-6, 6-4, 6-4; and Mulloy and Alloo defeated Kovacs and Brooks, 6-3, 7-5.

Tomorrow's singles pairings pit Kovacs against Mulloy, Bartlett against Sabin, Riggs vs. Surface and Grant vs. Schroeder.

Drawing To Be Held Tonight in $1,500 Albany Quail Trial

16 Top-Flight Dogs To Start Trials Monday

Competitors Must Run Hour Heats on Successive Days.

ALBANY, Ga., Dec. 28.—Field trial patrons from the Texas plains to the Canadian prairies are converging on Albany for the quail championship inaugural, $1,500 stake for pointers and setters, which starts Monday under the sponsorship of the Southern Amateur Field Trial Club. The championship event will be concluded Wednesday and be followed immediately by the club's amateur all-age stake and derby.

Sixteen top-ranking field trial performers will be on hand to compete for the title, the big end of the guaranteed purse, and a leg on the Albany trophy, donated by R. W. Woodruff and placed in competition for the first time. The entries comprise the "cream" of the bird dog "crop" now performing before the public.

SCOTT ON HAND.

The advance guard of the field trial contingent, including Major Trammell Scott, president of the Southern Amateur Field Trial Club, arrived today and established headquarters at the New Albany hotel. By tomorrow night many of the owners and handlers will be here to witness the drawing of the braces for Monday's and Tuesday's heats. Among the prominent owners expected are: W. C. Teagle, of Port Chester, N. Y.; Udo Fleischmann, of New York City; Gerald M. Livingston, of New York and Quitman, Ga.; A. D. Noe Jr., of Jackson, Tenn.; Raymond Hoagland, of Cartersville, Ga., and others.

Under the rules of the championship stake, all competitors must run one-hour heats on two successive days. Dogs which are drawn to run the morning and afternoon courses on the first day will be re-drawn for the midday courses on the second day. Wednesday, the final day, the judges may call back six or more dogs for the final two-hour grind before announcing their decision. Under this plan every dog in the stake has an opportunity to run over different courses at different times.

THREE COURSES.

The courses have been laid out over three famous shooting preserves in this area, the properties of I. D. Johnson, W. C. Potter and Dwight Ellis. From all reports there are plenty of birds on these courses so that every dog should have an opportunity to show on game.

The judges will be: Emory Beetham, of Cleveland, Ohio, and Henry Banks, of Guerryton, Ala. Raymond Hoagland will serve as stake manager. Ed Farrior, of Union Springs, Ala., and Heber Jones, of Albany, will be marshals.

The sixteen dogs qualified to start are:

- Lester's Enjoy's Waho, pointer, owned by Dr. B. S. Lester, of Birmingham.
- Younis's Billie, pointer, owned by H. J. Youniss, Houston, Texas.
- Amazon's Village Girl, pointer, owned by H. E. McDaniel, of Houston, Texas.
- Lady Norias, pointer, owned by A. D. Noe Jr., of Jackson, Tenn.
- Tipsy's Top, pointer, owned by Raymond Hoagland, Cartersville, Ga.
- Norias Aeroflow, pointer, owned by W. C. Teagle, of Port Chester, N. Y.
- Spunky Creek, pointer, owned by E. J. Shaffer, of Hutchinson, Kan.
- Tarheel's Lucky Strike, pointer, owned by Gerald M. Livingston, of New York and Quitman, Ga.
- Farmwood Traveller, pointer, owned by U. M. Fleischman, of New York.
- Surracho, pointer, owned by W. Frank Miller, of Bradford, Pa.
- Dawn's Highland Bill, pointer, owned by J. H. Steinman and E. J. Eschelman, of Lancaster, Pa.
- Texas Ranger, pointer, owned by D. B. McDaniel, of Houston, Texas.
- Bobbi's Peerless Pride, setter, owned by L. B. Bobbitt, of Winston-Salem, N. C.
- Ray's Jingo Joe, pointer, owned by G. M. Livingston, of New York and Quitman.
- Allegheny Baconbird, pointer, owned by Hugh McIndoe, of Kansas City, Mo.
- Hilbriht Susannah, setter, owned by M. G. Dudley, of Greenville, S. C.

Raccoon Pays Off Burke Trapper

One of the unknown industries of the state which nets a sizeable chunk of cash for professionals and many farm families is trapping. Muskrat, skunk, mink and raccoon skins are taken by the hundreds throughout the legal season (November 20-March 1) along the streams and lakes of Georgia.

John Thomas, of Burke county, caught 37 coons in 19 days this month. He will receive an average of $2.50 each for the pelts. In addition he took an offer for which he received $17.50.

Eagle Pays Life For Stealing Pig

A bald eagle made one visit too many to John Henderson's hog pasture at Manor.

The eagle took a 30-pound pig one day and came back two days later for another depredation. A steel trap greeted the big bird and it was caught by one toe.

Henderson said the eagle measured seven feet from wing tips. He sent it to the United States Fish and Wildlife Service, to which he reported his catch. It is against the federal law to shoot the bald eagle, the national bird of the United States.

DIXIE'S FIELDS —and— STREAMS

EXPERT PANTOPHAGIST.

The old adage that an expert is just an ordinary man away from home is usually true. But there comes a time during an average lifetime when each of us must feel that our number is up, and the world should benefit from our decision, rendered as an authority. So, in today's column, Volume III, Issue 52, of Dixie's Fields and Streams, your correspondent appears for the first time in the role of an expert.

Not as a fisherman, for my adventures in piscatorial fields (or streams) have produced a batting average of .001 per cent out of several thousand times at bat. As a marksman? No! Although during the past few years I have spent several happy hours in pursuing the sport of skeet and trap shooting, my trophy shelf would hardly yield enough silver to produce 10 thin dimes.

And not as a hunter, for, although during the past 15 years I have chased or been chased by practically every species of game found on the North American continent, my chances of going down in American hunting archives as another Daniel Boone or Theodore Roosevelt are absolutely nil. But, as a pantophagist, I defy anyone to question my ability. For in the field of gastronomical endeavors I fear no man. Be it a question of quantity or quality, bird, beast or fish, the devouring of outdoor delicacies is right down my alley.

So it is little wonder that during a five-day hunting trip last week a decision was made to select the most delectable food provided by the wilds and procured by the gun. Meal after meal, cooked in our hunting lodge, deep in the forest found a parade of savory foods.

Quail on toast, or fried to a golden brown; doves, simmering in a rich cream gravy; roast duck, venison steaks, served on a sizzling hot platter. Any of these dishes fit for a king—and then roast wild turkey with chestnut dressing, the finest of all game birds, done to a turn with big slabs of white breast meat.

Surely, the wild turkey must be the choice food of nature, at least it was in our opinion, until that last night on returning from the duck blinds, cold and wet, our colored cook, Henry, announced that supper would be a little lean. Henry had knocked off a couple of fox squirrels with his rifle during the day and converted his game into squirrel stew.

Dressed and parboiled for an hour, potatoes, onions and seasoning were added, with a little flour for thickening, and this combination was allowed to simmer until ready to serve. The aroma of this dish was enough to serve notice that here, indeed, was a food that out-classed all others. One taste of its succulent meat and you were sure. But if any doubt remained, the savoriness of the gravy dispelled it, for surely this was a brew of the gods.

So off goes my hat to squirrel stew, and on record goes my allegiance to this dish.

ROAST DUCK A LA SHAW.

Speaking of dishes, recipes and what have you, Mrs. A. C. Shaw, just another of Atlanta's "hunting widows," has furnished her own recipe for roast wild duck. Being an old duck hunter, it's hard for me to get the point, but pass it on to the little woman; she may appreciate it.

Go to your nearest poultry dealer and buy the oldest, toughest and skinniest rooster on hand; buy three fish at the market; dress the rooster, place the three fish inside the rooster and lay up on the back porch (for that gamey flavor), for three days; then cook 10 minutes and serve hot.

That, insists Mrs. Shaw, takes care of the game, but if your husband is one of those he-men that goes duck shooting for the sport, then follow the same recipe as above, but first send your husband to the nearest creek at 5 a. m., equipped with his shotgun and a quart of his favorite hooch. Have him take off his shoes, sit with feet in water, shoot three times and take one drink every five minutes until either the shells or hooch is exhausted.

When he returns home, place ice cap on head, hot water bottle on feet and put him to bed. It amounts to the same thing, and saves the gasoline required to drive 300 miles to the coast, and the roast duck—why, it's simply delicious. It has that gamey flavor.

THERE WAS A SANTA CLAUS.

If you in doubt about Santa Claus, ask young Bill Watkins, Bobby and Billy Weaver, the trap boys at the West End Gun Club. These youngsters will tell you emphatically that there is a Santa and he doesn't have a snowy beard. For to them, J. C. Martin, Atlanta sportsman, played Santa in a big way last Sunday. Martin and his son, Jack, a promising newcomer at skeet, presented the trap boys with much-needed boots and sweaters, plus candy and fruit at the close of last Sunday's shoot.

The big bundles of warm clothing and boots, all new and shiny, were presented the youngsters without fanfare by the Martin family—the kind of gifts that show a deep feeling of fellowship for all mankind. It even restored my faith in old Saint Nick.

'Outdoor Georgia' Is Popular as Gift

Bob Atkins, circulation and advertising manager of Outdoor Georgia, Division of Wildlife magazine, said yesterday that over 250 Christmas gift subscriptions went to sportsmen over the state.

Some hunters and fishermen placed orders for 10 gift subscriptions under a special holiday offer. Atkins appealed to all Georgia hunters and fishermen to submit stories and pictures for use in the publication.

Jimmy Braddock dressed up like Santa Tuesday and passed out hundreds of baskets of food to needy families.

White Cat Squirrel Is Found in Upson

Collectors of albino animals are having a busy season in Georgia this winter.

Several white ground squirrels have been captured, according to the Wildlife Division, and this week Taft Swygert, of Upson county, reported that he had a month-old white cat squirrel which he took from a nest with two grays of the same litter. A permit must be obtained to hold wild animals in captivity.

Feeding Is Most Important Item In Raising and Keeping Puppy

Meat and Milk Are Highly Recommended; Raw Beef Best; Milk Can Be Canned or Fresh.

By GEORGE BERNER.

Well, Christmas has come and gone and not to be worried about now for another year, but in the many homes where there is a new puppy the problem of what is the best way to take care of it has come up. Some of the new dog owners don't know much about raising a dog and admit it. Others don't know anything about it, either, but let on they do, usually to the discomfort of the dog involved.

Probably the most important thing connected with keeping and raising a puppy is what to feed it. It certainly must eat and must eat what it is given but there is no reason why feeding should be a problem. Keep in mind that meat and milk will not only keep a puppy alive but will enable him to grow into a healthy dog, and whenever in doubt feed one or both of them. The milk may be fresh or canned (fresh preferred) and the meat should be beef preferably, and it should be fed raw. Mutton, lamb or veal may also be fed and even lean pork if it is well cooked.

The best possible diet for the growing puppy in our opinion consists of meat, milk, dry dog food and a little cod liver oil. If the pup is one of the very large breeds, calcium in some form should be included. We like calcium gluconate and give about a tablespoon a day.

4 TIMES DAILY.

The puppy should be fed four times a day and at about the same hours each day. A little dry dog food and milk is for the morning feeding, then a little more dog food and meat about noon and the afternoon and evening meals may be a combination of any of them. Never put cod liver oil or any other medicine in the puppies' food but give it to him by hand if he won't take it from a dish between meals.

When said pup is about four months old the feedings may be reduced to three, although he will need much food and perhaps

Dove Hunters Getting Ready For Big Month

Birds Reported Forming Flocks of 200 in South Georgia Fields.

For many years hunters have claimed that January provided the only dove shooting offered in Georgia. And many never even pull their guns off the shelf until after Christmas.

Scarcity of the bird has kept hunting to an unheard-of low this winter, but reports from over the state indicate that firing will be loud and regular from now until the close of gunning January 31.

Scattered in small flocks early in the season, doves now are forming flocks of 200 and more in many south Georgia fields. Many hunters have bagged the limit of 12 in the past two weeks, but big shoots in which from 25 to 50 hunters participate have been waiting for the after-Christmas campaign.

Charlie Elliott, director of the Wildlife Division, yesterday reminded sportsmen of the established scarcity of this bird and urged them to observe the bag limit and take no more than a fair share.

"This means," he said, "that shooting every day is out, as the possession limit is 12."

Wildlife rangers are preparing to work overtime to enforce the hours on shooting and the "three-shot" regulation. Doves cannot be taken over baited areas, nor before sunup or after sundown.

Waterfowl Season Ends December 31

The open season on geese, ducks and snipe will close Tuesday (December 31), the Division of Wildlife announced yesterday.

A warm season with little rainfall kept waterfowl bags empty as a whole, according to reports of wildlife rangers. During the 60 days of a lengthened season there were few successful hunts despite the increase in the duck population and number of hunters.

The squirrel season in the following counties will close on the same day: Catosa, Chattooga, Dade, Dawson, Fannin, Gilmer, Gordon, Habersham, Lumpkin, Murray, Pickens, Rabun, Stephens, Towns, Union, Walker, White and Whitfield.

Duck Hawk Kills Goose in Midair

Wildlife Ranger C. L. Harrell, of Waycross, last week reported hearing a story of a duck hawk attacking a flock of geese in mid-air near the Okefenokee swamp. R. B. Zachary, of Waycross, said he saw the hawk dive at a terrific speed into the Canada V and a big honker had made his last trip south.

Following up its prey the hawk went to the ground, but was chased away by a group of Negroes near by.

The duck hawk, a small bird, is the fastest thing on wings and has been known to slaughter whole flocks of shore birds purely to satisfy his lust for killing.

Stanford Is 2-1 Favorite as Nebraska Arrives in Pasadena Today

Husker Team Bolstered by Star's Return

Rohrig Ready To Run; Standlee and Vucinich on Ailing List.

By HENRY McLEMORE.
PASADENA, Cal., Dec. 28.—(UP)—Stanford's fast and facile Indians were 2-to-1 favorites to night to turn back Nebraska in the Rose Bowl but the odds were expected to tighten tomorrow when the Cornhuskers come in from their Arizona desert retreat to begin final preparations for the January 1 football game.

Nebraska will reach this city of roses practically at full strength. Major Biff Jones reported from Phoenix today that Herman Rohrig, the triple threat back who was threatened with influenza, was well again and that Quarterback Roy Petch, with an injured back, was the only casualty on the big squad.

Stanford, which has been working out in the shadow of the big bowl in the Arroyo Seco for several days is not in a particularly happy physical condition.

SQUAD WEAKENED.
While there are but two players with definite injuries, the team physician is not optimistic over the shape of the squad. He said the influenza which struck the team early in the month has left Stanford's players weak and that he doubts that the boys will be fully recovered by New Year's Day.

The two Stanford stars who are not likely to see much action are Norm Standlee, a starting fullback, and his understudy, Milt Vucinich. Standlee, tremendously fast despite his 217 pounds, is bothered by a swollen right ankle and Vucinich has a bad knee which may keep him out of the game as well. Standlee has been working with the team but has shown little of the drive that made him the most feared back on the team during the regular season.

Stanford's workouts have indicated that the Californians are the best Nebraska will face. Their workout today was brilliant. Little Frankie Albert and his aide, Thor Peterson, fill the air with aerials. They throw passes short behind the line, wide and flat to the flanks, and deep down the middle.

PASSES TO FLY.
Evidently the Indians believe all they have heard of Nebraska's mighty line strength and are not going to wear themselves out with plays directed at it. Stanford can scarcely afford to indulge in any wearing down process because the Indians are woefully weak in replacements. They admitted this during the season by playing the starting team an average of nearly 50 minutes a game.

Nebraska will get a chance to see Stanford's formation in action tomorrow when the Chicago Bears, masters of the device, play the National League All Stars in a charity game at Gilmore stadium, Los Angeles.

The Cornhusker coaching staff has made recommendations for the game and it is believed the squad will be taken along for a peek at the offense which enabled Stanford to sweep through the Pacific Coast conference without tie or defeat.

Scalpers are doing a brisk business with Rose Bowl tickets. Never in the history of the Tournament of Roses Game has there been such a demand for tickets and those with seats to peddle are asking and getting as high as $15 for a single patchbox and a sellout crowd of nearly 90,000 is assured.

Nebraska May Give Indians Own Medicine.
PHOENIX, Ariz., Dec. 28.—(AP) Coach Biff Jones, who apparently doesn't agree with members of his squad that they have reached top form, worked them harder than ever today in preparation for the Rose Bowl.

The Cornhuskers were out for light practice in sweat clothes during the morning, and returned to the field after lunch for scrimmages on both offensive and defensive plays.

They leave for Pasadena, Cal., tonight. Jones will take the players tomorrow to see the game in Los Angeles between the Chicago Bears and the National Professional League All-Stars. It will be the first time the Nebraskans have seen the "T" formation used by Stanford.

Nebraska will workout twice Monday on the Occidental College gridiron at Pasadena, and hold one practice session in the Rose Bowl Tuesday before meeting Stanford New Year's Day.

Rex Enright Turns Graveyard Into Nursery for Carolina Hopes

Former Irish Fullback Gets Extended Contract After Losing Season With Gamecocks.

COLUMBIA, S. C., Dec. 28.—(AP)—Rex Enright, a star fullback at Notre Dame, has converted the University of South Carolina from a coaches' graveyard into a nursery for new Gamecock hopes.

And he's done it despite one of the most disastrous seasons—on the basis of the record—in South Carolina history.

His team won three and lost six games this year and in the three years he's been at the helm he has yet to whip Clemson, Southern Conference champions and traditional Gamecock foe.

FOUR-YEAR CONTRACT.
Yet the board of trustees unanimously extended Enright's contract for four additional years after its expiration in December, 1941, assuring him of five more years as head coach here.

And his friends had a few facts to back up their warnings—hadn't Bill Laval been given the boot unceremoniously in 1934 after amassing a record of 38 wins against 26 losses and six ties over a period of seven years?

Laval's seven-year tenure had set up a new record for Gamecock coaches—most of the others had been booted out long before reaching that point. And Laval's teams beat Clemson three times in a row. But the wolves had complained that he wasn't getting the most out of his squad.

Don McCallister followed Laval. After 13 wins and 21 losses in three years, the wolves forced the university to buy up the final year of his four-year contract at par value.

And why hasn't Enright been given the boot his predecessors received? There are several reasons. One of them most frequently advanced by alumni is that he is an extremely capable coach. His teams have played the toughest schedules of any South Carolina institution and they have shown steady improvement. And win, lose or draw they can be counted on for more than the average number of thrills a game.

GAMECOCKS FIGHT.
A Penn State scout who watched the Gamecocks lose a 27-21 heartbreaker to Duquesne's powerhouse, declared: "I have never seen a team put up as grand a fight as that. I forgot I was scouting and became an out and out rooter."

Coach Frank Howard, of Clemson, attributed his team's poor showing in late season to the terrific pounding the Tigers received in their 21-13 win over the Gamecocks.

Most people gave Rex credit for instilling a new spirit in the players.

But Rex disclaims all credit and counters with the assertion that "you have to be born with a spirit like theirs—nobody can give it to you."

And he attributes much of the team's spirit to their fellow students—400 got up at 4 a. m. to welcome the players home after a defeat and at the close of the season the student body honored "em at a huge banquet.

One thing is sure—somebody has changed or been changed.

Police Play Celtics January 23
The Police Department basketball team will play the Celtics on the night of January 23. It was announced last night by Captain Neil Ellis, manager of the "enforcement" outfit.

Captain Ellis also said that the Police would meet the House of David team January 19. Both games will be played at the Sports Arena.

The Police will clash with General Shoe Monday night in one of a series of warm-ups for the Whiskered and Celtic quins. The Y. M. S. A. will play the Aheps at 7 o'clock in a preliminary game.

Wise Observers Take Note, However, of Rams' Fierce Drilling.
By FELIX R. MCKNIGHT.
DALLAS, Texas, Dec. 28.—(AP) Odds, shaped by some of the more philanthropic souls of the bookmakers' brotherhood, tonight made the Texas Aggies 8-5 favorites over the Fordhams in the Cotton Bowl—but football-wise critics nodded disapprovingly.

First, they didn't like the way the Fordhams literally wrecked sturdy blocking machines in practice. Second, they did their figuring by an old standby—statistics.

Fordham, using Southern Methodist University's blocking machine that had held up exceedingly well through a tough season, buckled and collapsed when Tackle John Kuzman gave it a running pop the first time.

It tended to show why Fordham's offense, over an eight-game season that included such victims as Purdue, North Carolina, Pitt, Tulane and Arkansas, ground out yardage that ranked it as one of the nation's best.

Fordham's rushing offense, figured on average yardage per game, was only 4 of a yard behind the average Jarrin' John Kimbrough and his mates compiled for the Aggies.

The only edge the critics could hand the Aggies came in the matter of reserve strength.

Sleepy Jim Crowley, of Fordham, blandly admitted that he has a 15-man squad and that after that number has been exhausted, spots appear before his eyes.

The Aggies, who started the season working two teams a game and then lapsed into using such regulars as Kimbrough, Blocking Back Jim Thomson, Guard Marshall Robnett and End Jim Sterling the full 60 minutes, have discovered anew that their reserve strength is exceptional.

From their College Station hideout have come reports that the Aggies again will try the Ufit system against Fordham in an effort to wear down a foe shy on replacements. Coach Homer Norton decided upon the plan after watching his second stringers maul the regulars in scrimmages.

Balmy weather replaced the rain and cold of the past several days and both teams were able to go through two workouts in sunshine.

Fordham will come up to the kickoff with slightly more tapering of work behind it. On Monday, when the Aggies will be en route to Dallas, the Rams will have two drills. The Aggies will have two drills in mid-afternoon and get in one session on Southern Methodists' gridiron.

one-foot line. He was forced out of bounds. And then Bosch hit the line for the touchdown. Bosch's try for extra point was blocked.

ERROR IN JUDGMENT.
A terrible error in judgment cropped up on the California side in the fourth quarter. The Bears waited for fourth down to kick, and there was a fumble on the center snap.

And so it was Tech's ball at the California 16. The fifth California fumble—and there had been only five—worked to Tech's advantage.

Then, with the ball at the 6, California got its first break. Tech fumbled for the first time and the Bears recovered. It saved a third touchdown, as Reinhard kicked out of danger.

A LONG RIDE BACK.
Pluto Oliver replaced hero Johnny Bosch with eight minutes left to go in the game. The gigantic Bears had been beaten by a 150-pound back.

Which carries back to the tale of Jack the Giant Killer. John Bosch, the Bear slayer, used an unerring arm for a slingshot. He didn't know the field was muddy.

And so it ended, 13 to 0, which is the equivalent of a long ride back to Berkeley, Cal., for the Golden Bears of the Golden West. Bosch and Ison and Cavette were triple heroes for the Golden Jackets of Georgia Tech.

HARDEST TO STOP.
Ed Molinski, All-American guard at Tennessee, says that the hardest player he ever tried to stop in a football game was Deal, of Auburn; the greatest lineman he faced over a three-year span was Gatto, tackle on L. S. U. team in 1938.

WEST DENVER HIGH VS. FLORENCE COLLEGE OCT. 9, 1937

Also to be discussed were rules to permit running with a fumbled ball, and to have teams change goals after each touchdown.

This sounds screwy, but Ray Morrison, Temple coach, played four Vanderbilt football teams that didn't once lose to Tennessee.

Maroon Aces Romp, Boosting Odds to 8-5

State Supporters Feel Georgetown's Vaunted Power Cannot Match Speed and Spirit.

MIAMI, Fla., Dec. 28.—(UP)—Word went around Miami tonight that Mississippi State was "hot" and Coach Allyn McKen's Maroons became an 8-5 favorite to defeat Georgetown in the Orange Bowl New Year's Day.

The odds went up a point when the southern team romped through a brisk workout on Miami field and McKen announced they would take Sunday off and hold "fairly light" workouts Monday and Tuesday.

Mississippi State supporters apparently felt that Georgetown's vaunted power could not match the Maroons' speed and spirit. McKen obviously was highly pleased with the condition and enthusiasm of his squad as the first and second teams worked out against a "Georgetown" eleven composed of third stringers.

CRAIG STARS.
Wingback Walter Craig turned in a fancy exhibition of ball-carrying in a two-hour secret scrimmage, with Walter Dees, a 166-pound blocking back, opening the way.

The line play of Billy Arnold, right tackle, and Hunter Corhern, guard, drew praise from McKen and Line Coach Murray Warmath.

State's famed "J-boys," Harvey Johnson and Billy Jefferson, took things a bit easier but worked well behind the fast-charging line.

Meanwhile, the Georgetown squad drilled in secret on Flamingo Field at Miami Beach and Coach Jack Hagerty ordered a heavy work schedule for the next two days, in an effort to get his team accustomed to Miami climate and put the boys in shape for Wednesday's game.

HOYAS INJURED.
It was reported that Bill Nealon, tackle, and Jim Reichey, center, had been injured in practice and would not be able to work again before the game. Nealon pulled a muscle in his foot and Reichey was injured in the groin.

Both are in good shape—and McKen announced he probably would play against the Maroons. Frank Dornfeld, sophomore halfback, worked out today for the first time since he sprained an ankle at the last practice in Washington Tuesday.

Orange Bowl officials predicted a capacity crowd of close to 40,000 when the teams take the field at 2 p. m. (EST).

THE SPORTLIGHT
BY GRANTLAND RICE

BOWL ODDS.
LOS ANGELES, Dec. 28.—Only a short spell in advance of the bowl soirees next week, there is a frantic scramble, on the part of those who like to wager, concerning proper odds.

For example, as good as Stanford is, I don't believe any team rates 2 to 1 or 2 1/2 to 1 over Nebraska.

I can't see the early odds quoted on Tennessee over Boston College. Stanford should be around 8 to 5 over Nebraska. Texas A and M. should be about the same over Fordham. The Sugar and Orange bowl games should be around even money, and grab your pick.

"No team is any two-to-one shot over Nebraska," a well-known coach writes. "In Hopp, Rohrig, Luther, Francis and Petch, Nebraska has five fine backs. As good as any team can show. At the line, the line of Nebraska and Princeton, Nebraska has two big, strong ends. Both are good. In Kahler at 220, Behm at 200, and Herndon, Biff Jones has three extra good tackles. Alfson and Schwartzkopf are as good as any guards you'll see in any team in Stanford's hair more than once.

"Nebraska hasn't been any high-scoring team, but has been exceptional on defense. I don't think any 'T' formation is going to tear them all apart. Nebraska's line is much more experienced than Stanford's is."

You can also gamble that on its first trip to the Rose Bowl, with the prestige of the Big Six at stake, that Nebraska will have its complete share of spirit, which has always been a stout Nebraska factor through the years.

Nebraska certainly isn't going to Pasadena any beaten club. That "T" formation will have to be clicking from start to finish before Stanford wins.

Jones on Stanford.
Howard Harding Jones, headman of the Trojans for 16 years, thinks quite highly of this Stanford football team. Why not?

For these same Stanford hands did him his first defeat in 18 games, and did it the hard way. The score was tied with four minutes of play left, and the ball was deep in Stanford's territory, but when the final gun sounded it was 21 to 7 in favor of the Redskins.

"I would not say that Jones, that the present Stanford team ranks about as high as the Duke and Tennessee clubs we met in the Rose Bowl during the last two seasons. The Indians may not be as tough as Duke was defensively, but they are better offensively."

"Clark Shaughnessy has a team of opportunists. When the going seems to be the hardest they get in and play their best. Witness what they did against us; against Washington, when they were behind, 10 to 0, and against Oregon State, when they were 7 to 0 at half time. This is the kind of football team a coach likes to have."

"One angle of this Stanford club hasn't been given much publicity. This is the staggering number of plays, or, I honestly believe Stanford has at least 175 variations. I know this because Bob McNeish, who scouted the Indians for us in every play they played, filled several notebooks with his diagrams."

I asked Jones what was the greatest number of plays or variations he gave his players in any one season.

"About 60," he replied. "When you get more than that it becomes pretty difficult for the boys to perfect them all. But apparently this Stanford gang is able to do it. More power to them. Of course, they don't all work as well as some, but it keeps the opposition guessing and of necessity you have to spend a lot of valuable time on the defensive practice for what might happen."

Other Odds.
Having written to a number of southern coaches who have played against Tennessee and Mississippi State, I find that practically the entire Dixie round-up is picking the two southern teams.

I think they have underrated both Boston College and Georgetown. I would say that either was at least two or maybe three touchdowns better than Tennessee.

Send No Food To Nazi-Held Lands-Refugee

Any Supplies Would Aid Invader Only, Dutchman Declares.

By WILLARD COPE.
Systematic stripping of Holland, as of all German-occupied countries, was described bitterly yesterday by Wouter H. Wouters, Dutch national just returned to Atlanta, his former home.

No graver error could be made by kind-hearted folk opposed to Nazism, he declared, than to send food to any of the suffering lands held by the Germans—it would just go to aid the invaders.

Wouters, who spent more than five months in Holland after the conquest and saw German activities at first hand, told how even clothing and household effects sent by other Holland communities, to aid the thousands made homeless by German bombing of the open city of Rotterdam, was sent to Germany.

Case Is Typical.
"One kindly lady in Apeldoorn enclosed a note with a large coat she donated, saying she had other articles of like material if they were wanted. She later received an answer from a woman in Liepzig, Germany, asking for the additional gifts. This was typical."

A diamond-setter, Wouters lived in Atlanta for several years before 1932, when he went back to Holland because of ill health. He reached New York December 3 with his wife and two children, Wilhelmina, 16, and Freddy, 12, and came here immediately. They are living, by coincidence, at 1093 Amsterdam avenue.

Livestock Killed.
Fully two-thirds of Holland's livestock has been killed, for lack of feedstuffs, and sent to Germany, he said. Virtually all chickens are being slaughtered, frozen immediately and shipped to the conquerors' homeland. The same is true of butter. As for what is printed on Dutch cards—"they sound all right," says Wouters, "but it's just print on a card, for the foods are not available in the stores."

Asked about the morale of the Dutch under occupation, he said: "The last months before my departure, I traveled to many parts of my country and spoke with people from all walks of life. There is just one feeling, Holland must be free again. The people of the Netherlands have every faith in the Royal Air Force of Great Britain. They all believe that in the end, Germany will be beaten as never before and the German people will have to receive the punishment they deserve in allowing a bunch of criminals to run their country and let their youth be killed for the glory of their Fuehrer."

Holland Not Beaten.
"This is what the people of Holland wanted me to tell you—they are not beaten, they believe in the resurrection of their country and the overthrow of barbarism. They are thankful to Great Britain for the tremendous struggle they carry on, not only in their own behalf but in the behalf of all peace loving countries."

They believe in the struggle which Great Britain is now engaged in and they are glad that our navy and our airmen are still able to help them. We in Holland have a word used by the great, Orange Willem de Zwijger, the man who in the war with Spain which lasted for 80 years, was our leader. He said 'ende despoert niet' which means in English 'Have no despair, in the end we will win.' "With this assurance, we will be able to withstand everything the Germans might do because we know they will lose the war which Hitler started."

Describes Attack.
His description of the German descent on Holland was graphic: "On the evening of May 9, I had been listening to the radio until they closed down for that day. The next morning I had to go early to Rotterdam to get my visas to come to America. I did not think for one moment that the next morning would bring something so horrible to us. It was about 4 o'clock the next morning when my daughter came to my bedroom saying, 'Daddy, there is war, the Germans are above our house in their airplanes.' I would not believe it. I told her, 'No, those are just our own planes doing some early morning practice,' but she insisted that it was not so, that she had heard the radio next door."

"I got up and took a look at the sky—there, before dawn, the swarms of German planes came over. Every place in the sky seemed to be filled with them. I then went down stairs and turned on the radio—there I heard what I had feared—Germany had broken all pledges to our country and had attacked us in the middle of the night. By 5 o'clock in the morning, they had overrun all the air-dromes in our country with the help of her fifth column, consisting of Germans already in our country, which had given them a living for some years and which some of these same people had adopted as their new Fatherland."

Armed Forces Seek To Better Assault Tactics

Techniques Used in European War Being Studied.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 28.—(AP)—The War Department disclosed today intensified efforts by the Army and Marine Corps to adapt and improve methods of assault in war such as were used by Nazi forces in breaking through France's Maginot Line.

Tanks, fixed fortifications and barbed wire, it said, are being employed at Fort Belvoir, Va., by a group of 38 officers in working out "assault tactics and other techniques used in the present world war."

"It is expected that from the results of the studies carried out in this course, a number of new methods will be adopted as standard procedure in future engineering operations," the department added.

These and other tests are being coupled with accelerated training of engineer officers and men, in accord with the blitzkrieg demonstration of the value of such technical troops.

Masters' Paintings Will Be Exhibited

An exhibition from the Robert C. Vose gallery, of Boston, Mass., including the paintings of many famous masters, will be hung in the High Museum of Art Wednesday and will be open to the public without charge throughout the month of January.

Oil paintings of Rembrandt, Hoppner, Franz Hals, Raburn, Piazzetta, Reynolds, Corot, Monticelli and Largilliere will represent the schools of other nationalities, and American work in the show will include pictures by Robert Brockman and Leopold Seyffert.

A reception at 8:30 o'clock Friday night at the museum, given for the Atlanta Art Association, will formally open the exhibition.

BANK TO OPEN.
AMERICUS, Ga., Dec. 28.—The Farmers' & Merchants' Bank, a newly chartered institution, will open for business at Leslie on January 2, it was announced today. W. T. Anderson is president and cashier; L. E. Deavours, vice president, and Robert P. Hines, assistant cashier.

"SEND NO FOOD!"—Wouter H. Wouters, just returned from Holland, his native land, yesterday urged against sending relief to occupied lands because it would be used to help Germany.

'Build Planes Hartsfield Asks Before It's Too Change in Law Late,' U.S. Urged On Registration

Germans Could Be Swamped in 6 Months, CIO Aide Says.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 28.—(UP)—Wait Reuther, author of the CIO-sponsored plan for building 500 fighter planes a day in idle automobile plant facilities, tonight pleaded for speedy adoption of the scheme lest it be too late to aid Great Britain, "our country's main defense."

Addressing a radio audience, Reuther, director of the General Motors division of the United Automobile Workers of America, said that if the plan were put in force immediately, enough planes could be turned out in six months "to swamp" the Nazi air force.

He urged the new super-defense agency—the office for production management—to study the feasibility of the plan.

"Our plan would postpone the tooling of new automobile models six months," he said, "but when men are being drafted that is little enough to ask of the automotive industry."

Meanwhile, it was learned that James M. Landis, dean of the Harvard Law School and former chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission, is being considered for an important post in the new defense set-up.

Reuther declared that Britain's need for planes is "fierce and urgent."

"We must supply them," he said, "and Hitler will not wait while we pursue the usual leisurely methods of production. In London they are huddled in the subways praying for aid from America. In Detroit they are huddled over the blueprints praying that Hitler will be obliging enough to postpone an 'all out' attack on England for another two years until new plants finally begin to turn out engines and aircraft."

Errol Flynn Yacht Safe in California
AVALON, Catalina Island, Cal., Dec. 28.—(AP)—Movie Actor Errol Flynn's yacht Sirroco, unreported since it left for Honolulu 11 days ago, put in here today, forced back by heavy winds.

Al Wetzel, Warner Brothers studio cameraman, said the luxurious craft encountered 60-mile-an-hour gales on December 24, about 600 miles from California. It continued another 200 miles, but reports of further storms caused Captain William Keil to turn back.

Because the Sirroco's radio sending apparatus went out the second day of the voyage, it was unable to report its whereabouts. Flynn did not make the trip.

UNIVERSITY IN KHAKI.
VANCOUVER, B. C., Dec. 28.—(UP)—President L. S. Klincek promised in September that this would be a "khaki term" at the University of British Columbia—and the promise has been fulfilled. The U. B. C. campus is swarming with uniforms these days. Military training takes precedence over all sports.

LEMON JUICE RECIPE CHECKS RHEUMATIC PAIN QUICKLY
If you suffer from rheumatic, arthritis or neuritis pain, try this simple inexpensive home recipe that thousands are using. Get a package of Ru-Ex Compound, a two-week supply, today. Mix it with a quart of water, add the juice of 4 lemons. It's easy. No trouble at all and pleasant. You need only 2 tablespoonfuls two times a day. Often within 48 hours—sometimes overnight—splendid results are obtained. If the pains do not quickly leave and if you do not feel better, return the empty package and Ru-Ex will cost you nothing to try as it is sold by your druggist under an absolute money-back guarantee. Ru-Ex Compound is for sale and recommended by Jacobs and drug stores everywhere.

House Probers Call for NLRB Reorganization

Raise Question of Whether Policies Might Imperil Defense.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 28.—(AP)—A majority of a special house investigating committee called today for "complete reorganization" of the National Labor Relations Board and raised the question of whether board policies might jeopardize national defense.

In a 70,000-word report, Representatives Smith, Democrat, Virginia; Halleck, Republican, Indiana; and Routhohn, Republican, Ohio, asserted that the board had attempted to have government contracts denied to firms it contended were violating the Wagner act. They added:

"The committee respectfully concludes that when an administrative agency of the government so far forgets its proper function as to defy the will of congress, harbor and protect avowed enemies of constitutional government then the time has come when the people of this country must raise their voices in insistent protest lest industrial peace and, with it, the entire program of national defense, be jeopardized."

They also said they considered it a matter of "extreme moment" for the country at this time that "a government agency and its employees should, in the exercise of their duties, foster and protect Communists."

Miss Verdi Weds Mr. Guild At Decatur Church Rites

Miss Martha Verdi, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Victor G. Verdi, of Decatur, became the bride of Edgar Maslen Guild, of Athens and Atlanta, at a beautiful church ceremony taking place at 5:30 o'clock yesterday afternoon, at the First Methodist church in Decatur. Rev. J. W. O. McKibben, the pastor, performed the ceremony in the presence of relatives and friends of the young couple. Frank Williamson, the organist, and Miss Marie Waters, the pianist, presented the musical program. Palms and ferns formed the background for the altar, and smiling faces were in artistic arrangement in the choir loft. Seven-branched candelabra held burning white tapers in pyramid effect and three urns were filled with Easter lilies.

Easter lilies marked the pews which were reserved for the families, out-of-town guests and members of the Alpha Gamma Delta of the University of Georgia, where the bride attended school.

Ushers were Richard Harris, Tom Haynes, Robert Grier and Sellers Rogers. Miss Ruth Sammon was maid of honor. She wore a charming model of melody gold tulle. The full skirt was banded in a matching shade of velvet ribbon. The fitted bodice featured a sweetheart neckline and short puffed sleeves. She wore a hat crownless with a matching material and carried a bouquet of tulle and roses.

The bridesmaids were Misses Betty Verdi, sister of the bride; Eloise Simpson, Pat Ward and Jean Sortore. Their gowns of river blue tulle were fashioned like that worn by the maids of honor. They wore halo crownless hats to match their gowns, and their bouquets were formed of yellow roses.

The lovely bride entered with her father, Victor G. Verdi, by whom she was given in marriage. They were met at the altar by the groom and Gene Maxwell, who was best man.

The bride's exquisite gown of ivory duchess satin was designed with a sweetheart neckline and long-fitted sleeves. Valenciennes lace outlined the neckline and sleeves. The bodice was molded at the waistline and the graceful and full skirt touched the floor and formed a long train in the back. The full-length tulle veil was fastened to her hair with a coronet of orange blossoms. She wore a single strand of pearls that was the gift of her maid of honor.

Mrs. Ernest Stewart, of Thomasville, Ga., Miss Norma Wood, of Commerce, Ga.; Miss Mary Ellen Lokey, of Windy, Ga.; James Carmichael, Swainsboro, Ga.

Following the ceremony, a reception was held at the bride's home. Later Mr. and Mrs. Hutcherson left for a motor trip before going to Duncannon, Fla., to reside.

Mrs. Hutcherson is a niece of Mrs. Thomas Peacock and Miss Carolyn McGarity, of Atlanta, Ga.

Carnival Ball Will Benefit Tallulah Fund

Among brilliant events planned for the coming month is the colorful carnival ball to be given by the Young Matrons' Circle for Tallulah Falls School for the benefit of the Pessie Fenton Otley Endowment Fund. This event will take place January 27 at the Rainbow Roof of the Ansley hotel. Handsome door prizes will be given on the hour every hour during the evening. Dinner, as well as dancing, will be a feature of the occasion.

Miss McGarity, Mr. Hutcherson Wed in Florida

FOOT PIERCE, Fla., Dec. 28.—The marriage of Miss Carolyn McGarity, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Dilmus McGarity, of Fort Pierce, and Walter Barbre Hutcherson, of Duncannon, Fla., was solemnized at 4 o'clock Saturday afternoon in the First Presbyterian church.

Dr. James M. Howard, pastor of the church, read the marriage vows and Miss Ann Hutcherson, of Buchanan, Ga., was maid of honor, and little Miss Babs Riggs, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Riggs, of Fort Pierce, were the bride's attendants.

Ensign Hamby Hutcherson, of Norfolk, Va., was best man and ushers were Robert McGarity, only brother of the bride; Conrad Hardie, cousin of the bride, and Ernest Cody, of Gainesville, Fla., cousin of the groom.

Mrs. Ralph Loring, of Cocoa, Fla., aunt of the bride, played piano music and Mrs. Magdalene Meredith and Mrs. James Jamison, of Wabasso, Fla., offered selections.

Miss Hutcherson, bridesmaid, wore a gown of light blue tulle with a matching hat, and carried a bouquet. The flower girl was dressed in yellow tulle and carried a basket of roses. The bride, who entered with her father who gave her in marriage, was gown in white satin made with a square neckline and long sleeves that fit closely at the wrists. Her veil, of bridal illusion edged with Chantilly lace, was double tiered and fingertip length and hung from a coronet of orange blossoms in a half wreath. She carried a white Testament topped with a white gardenia and tuberoses.

Following the ceremony, a reception was held at the bride's home.

Later Mr. and Mrs. Hutcherson left for a motor trip before going to Duncannon, Fla., to reside.

Mrs. Hutcherson is a niece of Mrs. Thomas Peacock and Miss Carolyn McGarity, of Atlanta, Ga.

Arnold—Lang.

SHANGHAI, China, Dec. 28.—Mr. and Mrs. Julian Arnold announce the marriage of their daughter, Miss Frances Arnold, to Benjamin Sewell Lang, on December 7, here.

Lang is associated with the National City Bank of New York in this city.

goldenrod shade. The fitted bodice and long, close-fitting sleeves were made of heavy silk lace shot with gold, and the graceful skirt was designed of chiffon. She wore a matching halo hat and her flowers were bronze orchids.

Mrs. Rosa Rogers Guild, mother of the groom, wore a model of black tulle fashioned with a brief jacket and trimmed with a quilted design in white. Her hat and accessories matched her gown and she wore a shoulder bouquet of white orchids.

Reception at Hotel.

Mr. and Mrs. Verdi entertained at a reception following the ceremony at the Candler hotel.

The bride's table was centered with a three-tiered wedding cake embossed in roses and valley lilies, and encircled with roses, sweet peas and swainsboro. Silver candelabra held white lighted tapers and other appointments carried out the color motif of white and green. An orchestra furnished appropriate music. The bridal party and Mrs. Rosa Rogers Guild, mother of the groom, received with the hosts. Miss Marguerite Chesnut kept the bride's book.

Presiding at the punch bowls were Misses Sara Burns, Belle Hale, Sara Jarvis and Katherine Wing. Mr. Guild and his bride departed on their wedding trip, the bride traveling in a spring model featuring an aqua crepe blouse and navy blue skirt. Her hat was of mink fur, and she wore brown accessories, a brown fur coat and a shoulder spray of orchids. Upon their return, Mr. and Mrs. Guild will reside on Piedmont avenue.

Out-of-town guests were Mrs. Rosa Rogers Guild, William Sanders, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Forbs, Dallas, Tex.; Mr. and Mrs. Guy A. Sammon, Miss Ruth Sammon, of Abbeville, S. C.; Mrs. Henry Sellers, New York City; Gene Maxwell, Lexington, N. C.; Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Stewart, of Thomasville, Ga.; Miss Norma Wood, of Commerce, Ga.; Miss Mary Ellen Lokey, of Windy, Ga.; James Carmichael, Swainsboro, Ga.

Following the ceremony, a reception was held at the bride's home. Later Mr. and Mrs. Hutcherson left for a motor trip before going to Duncannon, Fla., to reside.

MISS GLORIA FRANCES SEAMAN.

Miss Seaman Is Betrothed To Robert W. Johnson Jr.

At an informal tea given yesterday afternoon Miss Gloria Frances Seaman's engagement was announced to Robert Woodson Johnson Jr. The tea was given by the bride-elect's mother, assembling many of her friends.

Miss Seaman is the only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank E. Seaman, of Atlanta, formerly of Oklahoma City, Okla. Mr. Johnson is the eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert W. Johnson, of Atlanta.

The beautiful bride-elect was graduated from Classen High school in Oklahoma City in 1938, where she was active in school organizations. In Atlanta, she later attended Oglethorpe University, where she was a member of the Duchess Club and Chi Omega sorority, social clubs, and the Glee Club.

Mr. Johnson was graduated from Boys' High school in 1935. Later he attended Georgia Tech, where he was pledged to S. P. E. social fraternity. He has since been affiliated with the Farm Security Administration in Georgia.

The wedding takes place in the spring, plans for which will be revealed at a later date.

Miss Marion Clarke Weds Reverdy Clarke at Church

Before a fashionable gathering of Atlanta society and out-of-town guests, Miss Marion Walton Clarke, lovely daughter of Mrs. William Walton Clarke, was married to Reverdy Estill Clarke, son of Christian H. Clarke, of Philadelphia, Pa., yesterday afternoon at All Saints' Episcopal church. Rev. Theodore S. Will performed the ceremony at 5:30 o'clock.

Joseph Ragan, organist, presented a musical program prior to and during the ceremony. Decorating the altar were palms and ferns which formed an effective background for floor baskets containing arrangements of Easter lilies. Flanking the baskets were burning white tapers.

Bridal Personnel.

Featuring guests to their places were Logan Clarke, uncle of the bride; Alex Smith, J. P. Allen and Joseph Fisch, the bride's brother. Groomsmen were Leonard Richardson, Fred Storey, Joel Hurt III and James Minter.

Mrs. Edgar McHutchison, of Englewood, N. J., was her sister's matron of honor. Her beautiful gown of aqua net posed over tulle was fashioned with a satin bodice featuring a sweetheart neckline and short puffed sleeves. The bouffant skirt, which was gathered to the snug-fitting bodice, was made of layers of aqua net. She wore a matching net halo and carried a bouquet of carnations shading from pink to deep red.

The bridesmaids, Mesdames Joseph Fisch, Caldwell Holliday, Thomas Clarke, sisters of the bride, and Miss Elizabeth Wilmont, and the junior bridesmaids, Joan Fisch and Beverly Holliday, nieces of the bride, wore gowns styled like the matron of honor's, and their flowers were similar.

Thomas Clarke gave his sister in marriage. They were met at the altar by the groom and his best man, Captain Christian H. Clarke Jr., of Governor's Island, N. Y., his brother. The bride's exquisite gown of lustrous ivory satin, which belongs to Mrs. Harvey Hill Jr., the former Miss Emily Smith, and was worn by her at her marriage, was fashioned with a square neckline and short sleeves. The full graceful skirt extended to form a train in the back. Her veil of illusion tulle was caught to her hair by a coronet of orange blossoms. Her only ornament was a single strand of pearls and she carried a shower bouquet of orchids and valley lilies.

Mrs. Clarke, the bride's mother, was stylishly gowned in an aqua crepe gown, the bodice of which was trimmed with crystal beads. She wore an aqua felt hat trimmed with a brown veil. Completing her costume were brown accessories and a shoulder cluster of purple orchids.

Reception at Home.

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Fisch entertained at a reception after the ceremony at their home on West drive for members of the wedding personnel and the immediate families.

The bride's table was overlaid with a damask and lace cloth and centered with a tiered cake, the base of which was surrounded by valley lilies and bride's roses. Silver candelabra holding burning white tapers flanked the centerpiece. Silver bowls containing arrangements of white flowers and flanked by silver candelabra holding white tapers graced the buffet. The mantel was decorated with silver berries and sprays of hemlock.

Mr. Clarke and his bride left for a wedding trip to an unannounced destination. Mrs. Clarke donned for traveling a chic beige crepe gown topped with a matching wool coat trimmed with an eastern mink collar. Her outfit was accented by brown accessories and a shoulder cluster of orchids.

Among out-of-town guests present were Christian H. Clarke, of Philadelphia, Pa., the groom's father; Captain Christian H. Clarke Jr., and Mrs. Clarke, of Governors Island, N. Y.; the groom's brother and sister, Mrs. Edgar McHutchison, of Englewood, N. J.; the bride's sister; Misses Hetta Farrow and Mildred Fleming, of Richmond, Va., cousins of the groom, and the bride's cousins, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Clarke Ravenel, of Asheville, N. C.

Popular Pair Is Honored On Anniversary

Mr. and Mrs. Howell Ross Hanson were hosts at a dinner party last evening at the Biltmore hotel, complimenting their son and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Chambers.

The affair came as a complete surprise to the young couple, who celebrated their sixth wedding anniversary yesterday. Mrs. Chambers is the former Miss Rena Candler, daughter of Mrs. Hanson and the late William Candler.

The bridal motif was carried out in the decorations and the place cards, with a centerpiece formed of white roses and lilies of the valley. Handsome gifts were presented the honor guests, each present being of leather, symbolizing the sixth anniversary year. Covers were placed for 10 guests.

Miss Norman Is Honor Guest At Trousseau Tea

Miss Frances Norman, whose marriage to Lieutenant Lloyd Robert Block, United States army, takes place tomorrow at the Georgian Terrace, was honor guest at the trousseau tea given by her mother, Mrs. Harry Norman, at her home on Peachtree road.

The table was covered with a lace cloth and centered with a silver bowl filled with white snapdragons. The bowl is an heirloom in the family of Mrs. Norman, who inherited it from Brigadier General George Evans, United States army, and his wife, who was the daughter of Lord and Lady Church. The bowl was brought from England by her relatives and came into the possession of the maternal family of the bride-elect.

Silver candelabra held white tapers and at one end of the exquisitely appointed table, the crystal punch bowl was presided over by Mrs. Hugh Ellison and Mrs. James T. Burns.

Mrs. Norman was gown in black velvet and her flowers were gardenias. Miss Norman wore a black crepe dress with the bodice trimmed in black sequins, and the lapels on the wool jacket were made of black sequins.

Miss Katherine Hefferman was hostess at luncheon yesterday given as a complimentary gesture to lovely Miss Norman at a downtown restaurant. The table was beautified with crystal decorations. The round mirror in the center of the table reflected the silver-stemmed tree and its crystal branches. Crystal candelabra held white tapers, and miniature crystal holders held white candles. A bouquet made of white gladioli and valley lilies marked the place of the bride-elect.

Covers were placed for Miss Norman, Misses Jean and Mary Frances Witherspoon, Louise McCauley, Helen Miller, Anne Moseley, Rene Landgraf, Margaret Jones, Mrs. James J. P. Roberts, of Delos Springs, St. Petersburg, Fla.; Vernon Brown and the hostess.

Miss Burroughs is a descendant of prominent southern families and her parents are esteemed Brunswick citizens. After her graduation from Glynn Academy in Brunswick, she attended the University of Georgia at Athens, receiving her B. S. degree in June, 1940. She is a member of the Tri Delta sorority and took a leading part in campus activities during her four years at the university. Miss Burroughs, a charter member of the Brunswick Pirates Club, is now a member of the faculty of St. Mary's High school.

Mr. Wells is the only son of Mr. and Mrs. C. B. Wells of Atlanta. He graduated at Tech High school, later entering the University of Georgia, where he is an outstanding student and senior in the school of journalism. He is a member of Lambda Chi Alpha social fraternity and Sigma Delta Chi, professional journalistic fraternity, and takes an active part in all journalistic work on the campus.

After their marriage in June the couple will reside at Daytona Beach, Fla.

Miss Respass Weds James M. Hoey.

Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Respass, of Washington, D. C., announce the marriage of their daughter, Elia Elizabeth Respass, to James Meredith Hoey, of Atlanta, the marriage having been solemnized December 24 at the Peachtree Christian church, Dr. Robert T. Burns officiating.

Other officers installed include Mrs. Albion Ginn, associate matron; Curtis Cressy, associate patron; Mrs. Ruth Flynn, secretary; Mrs. Aline Haskin, treasurer; Mrs. Marjorie Milam, conductress; Mrs. Sally Aldredge, associate conductress.

The appointed officers are Mrs. Essie Zimmerman, chaplain; Mrs. Vena Suttles, marshal; Mrs. Kate Massey, organist; Mrs. Lazelle Shelton, Adah; Mrs. Ethel Hodges, Ruth; Mrs. Bertie Lee Sims, Esther; Mrs. Mary Jones, Martha; Mrs. Lucile Morris, Electa; Mrs. Callie Richards, warder; Angus White, sentinel.

The grand installing officers were Mrs. Grace Lynn, worthy grand matron of the state of Georgia, as grand installed officer; Mrs. Julian Jackson Turner, past grand matron, as grand marshal, and Mrs. Estie Hansen, as grand chaplain.

Mrs. Hazel Dendard, grand soloist, presented a song.

Mrs. Spearman Weds Mr. Weil At Quiet Rites

Enlisting the interest of a wide circle of friends throughout the state is the announcement of the marriage of Mrs. George Toombs Spearman, of Athens, to Robert Benedict Weil, of Greenbriar Farms, Farmington, Ga. The ceremony was quietly solemnized at noon yesterday at St. Mark Methodist church, with Dr. Lester Rumble reading the marriage service. Only members of the immediate family and a few close friends were present.

The bride chose for the ceremony a modish gown of brown wool trimmed with a quilted design and worn with a matching coat and a handsome scarf of sables. Her hat was a spring model combining brown straw and brown faille, and her accessories were in matching tones of brown. Completing her costume was a shoulder spray of bronze orchids.

Immediately after the ceremony Mr. and Mrs. Marion Bleakney, cousins of the bridegroom, entertained at a small breakfast at their home on Peachtree way in compliment to the bridal couple.

Mr. Weil and his bride left for a wedding trip to points of interest in Florida. After February 1 they will reside at Greenbriar Farms, at Farmington.

Mrs. Weil is a charming representative of a distinguished southern family. She is the sister of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Eakes Freeman, of Atlanta, and of Mr. and Mrs. B. R. Bloodworth, of Athens.

Westbrook-Fuller Wedding Performed.

MARIETTA, Ga., Dec. 28.—The wedding of Miss Mary Westbrook, of Powder Springs, to Foster Fuller, of Villa Rica, was recently performed by Dr. L. A. White at the home of the bride's cousins, Mr. and Mrs. C. W. McFarland here.

The blond beauty of the bride was enhanced by her dress of dusty rose wool made along tailored lines, with which she wore a matching hat, a black caracul coat and black accessories.

Mrs. Fuller is the only daughter of the late J. A. Westbrook and Mrs. Maude Ezzard Westbrook, of Powder Springs. Her only brother is James A. Westbrook, of Atlanta.

After a brief wedding trip the young couple will reside at Powder Springs.

Attending the wedding were Mr. and Mrs. James Westbrook, of Atlanta; Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Cole, Powder Springs; Miss Elizabeth Mabry and Mrs. Susie E. Mabry.

MISS MILDRED LOUISE SPRINKLE.

Miss Sprinkle, College Park, Engaged To Clarence Garner

Prominent among the engagements announced in College Park is that of Miss Mildred Louise Sprinkle to Clarence Woodrow Garner, of Atlanta, the marriage of the popular couple to take place on January 3 at College Park Methodist church.

Miss Sprinkle is the eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Sprinkle, of College Park. The bride-elect, who is an exponent of the brunet type of beauty, is an active worker in the College Park Methodist church, holding the positions of secretary and pianist in the Sunday school and Epworth League.

The future bride's mother is the former Miss Julia Kuhns, of Atlanta, daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Julius H. Kuhns, who were prominent photographers for 50 years, his father having been the first photographer in this city. Mr. Sprinkle, the bride-elect's father, is formerly of Adamsville and Hapeville. He is affiliated with the Pullman Company in Kirkwood.

Miss Sprinkle attended the Samuel R. Young grammar school, graduating from Russell High, in East Point, in 1938. She was affiliated with the Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company, and is now connected with the Southern Bell Telephone & Telegraph Company.

Mr. Garner, son of Mr. and Mrs. E. G. Garner, was born in Easton, he resides in Atlanta, having acquired his education in the Atlanta public schools, and is now affiliated with The Atlanta Constitution. His brothers are E. D. (Jack) Garner, of College Park, and A. E. Garner, of Atlanta.

Miss Waring, of Savannah, To Wed Mills Bee Lane Jr.

SAVANNAH, Ga., Dec. 28.—Engaging the interest of fashionable society throughout the state is the announcement made today by Dr. and Mrs. Antonio J. Waring of the engagement of their daughter, Miss Anne Waring, to Mills Bee Lane Jr., of Atlanta, formerly of Savannah.

Miss Waring, who is the only daughter of her parents, was graduated from Emma Willard school, at Troy, N. Y., in 1936 and afterwards attended Sweet Briar College in Virginia for two years.

For the past two years she has been studying with Dr. Lee Howard in Savannah and is now a registered medical technician. She made her debut in the winter of 1937-38 and is a member of the Junior League of Savannah.

Mr. Lane is the second son of Mr. and Mrs. Mills Bee Lane, of Savannah. He is a graduate of Middlesex school, Middlesex, Mass., and afterwards attended Yale University, from which he was graduated in the class of 1934. He is now first vice president of the Citizens & Southern National Bank, and for the past year has been located in the Atlanta office.

No date has been set for the wedding, which will unite two of Savannah's most prominent and influential families.

Mr. and Mrs. Hart Give Eggnog Party

A color motif of silver and white was employed in the decorations at the brilliant eggnog party given by Mr. and Mrs. Sam Hart at their home on Arden road on Friday.

The affair honored their brother and sister, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Purdy, of Baltimore, Md., who, with their small daughter, Pamela, are spending the holiday season here.

In the living room a Christmas tree, decorated with colored lights and tinsel, was placed on a mound of artificial snow. The eggnog table was covered in white tulle and posed over a cover of white satin and brilliant silver tinsel was garlanded around the table in effective design. In the dining room a color motif of red and white was used, with the silver eggnog bowl placed on a mound of red berries. Holiday greenery and red candles were arranged on the buffet.

Mrs. A. D. Grant and Miss Virginia Pairo served eggnog, and Mrs. Dewey Nabors and Mrs. Lyman Johnson assisted in receiving the 200 guests.

Miss Lee Honors Quartet of Debs

One of the most interesting social events of yesterday was the luncheon at which Miss Virginia Lee entertained at the Piedmont Driving Club honoring a quartet of attractive debutantes. The lovely honor guests were Misses Margaret Winship, Helen McDuffie, Evelyn Harrison and Jean Pentecost.

Assisting the hostess in entertaining were Mrs. George E. Home Jr., her sister, and Miss Helen Clarke.

Guests were seated at a single long table which had for its decorative theme a "Happy New Year" motif, the unusual idea being carried out in dolls graced with ribbons inscribed with good wishes for the forthcoming year. The floral arrangements, which were placed at intervals, consisted of red and white carnations in crystal bowls and mounds of rich greenery. Completing the decorations were red and silver celloglaph bells. The honor guests were presented British War Relief emblems and red carnation boutonnieres.

Vo Hammie Johnson read the treasurer's report. Miss Mary Helen Hynes is director of the chapter. Information on a conference held before the War Between the States began, and about the Hampton Roads conference, was given by Frances Wallace and Elizabeth Irvin.

Miss Estes Is Honored At Novel Party

Miss Jeannette Estes, one of the most widely feted of the season's debutantes, was honor guest last evening at the hillbilly party at which her brother and sister, Mr. and Mrs. George Vance, of Greenville, S. C., and Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Wilson were hosts. The novel affair was held in Rese, Ga., at the country home of the debutante's parents, Dr. and Mrs. Henry Grady Estes, who assisted in entertaining the 75 invited guests.

Debutantes and friends of the popular honor guest and their escorts motored to the scene of the party, the road being paved with the exception of a brief stretch near the cabin. At the end of the paved highway, horses and wagons were stationed for the purpose of transporting the guests over the rough road to the cabin.

A hillbilly orchestra, dressed in gay plaid shirts and overalls, played for dancing, and plump pigs rotated over open barbecue pits. Brunswick stew and other delicious hot dishes were served to whet keen appetites at the midnight hour.

A rustic motif prevailed in the decorations and the huge wagon wheels concealing the lights were garlanded with festive greenery. Alabama and Georgia. Her only sister is Miss Tulu Bradshaw.

The groom-elect is the son of Mr. and Mrs. William Howard Ector, of West Point. He is a graduate of the West Point High school and received his A. B. degree from the Georgia School of Technology, where he was a member of the Anak Society and of the Scabbard and Blade.

His mother is the daughter of A. J. Haley and the late Mrs. Haley, of Heflin, Ala., pioneer settlers of that section. On his paternal side he is descended from the Ector and Taylor families of Georgia. His sister is Mrs. I. M. Gomillion, of Montgomery, and his brothers are Haley and Tom Ector. He is now assistant manager of the Center theater, of High Point, N. C.

The marriage will be solemnized in the early spring, plans to be announced later.

"As the year of 1940 passes let us look back on all we have accomplished. As 1941 arrives may we look forward to the attainment of a higher and greater goal. 'I wish you a happy New Year.'

General James Jackson Chapter, of Valdosta, reports the following activities: A substantial balance in the treasury at the beginning of the fall work. Mrs. B. S. Burton, chairman of library committee, has purchased a number of books and 14 more are needed to complete the files. Mrs. J. K. White Jr. having resigned as regent, Mrs. W. W. Sanders was nominated to serve.

Others appointed by the board were Mrs. J. C. Hunt, second vice regent; Mrs. R. Walter Bennett, recording secretary; Mrs. Curtis Taylor, corresponding secretary; Miss Ola Barber, registrar; Mrs. H. Y. Tillman, historian, and Mrs. Lotta Greene, auditor.

Mrs. Di Ingram, chairman of Claude Davis Ingram Student Loan Fund, reported having sent to the state treasury, Mrs. Y. H. Yarbrough, United States Treasury bonds of the value of $4,600 for her registration. Mrs. Yarbrough sent them in turn to the state regents, University System of Georgia. Also accompanying these bonds was a check of over $500.

Notes amounting to over $700 were sent to State Regent Mrs. Thomas Mell, and after she has listed them, they were sent to the state regent of the University of Georgia. These regents are trustees of this money, which totals over $5,000.

Mrs. T. A. Baker, chairman of committee of marking historical spots, reported the erecting and unveiling of a marker in old Trouville cemetery. Her program and the key to the cemetery were appended to this report. She told of an ancient custom of erecting markers—quoting the 35th chapter of Genesis—where Jacob erected a pillar of stone at the spot where he met God—so the D. A. R. erected a marker to those awaiting God's call.

Miss Barbara Henry Marries Frederic Neill Cleaveland

At a late afternoon ceremony taking place yesterday at St. Luke's Episcopal church, Miss Barbara Ann Henry, lovely daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Joseph Henry, became the bride of Frederic Neill Cleaveland, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Frederic Cleaveland, of Gladstone, N. J. Rev. John Moore Walker performed the marriage at 5:30 o'clock in the presence of an assemblage of friends and relatives of the couple.

Mrs. Mozelle Horton Young, organist, accompanied Miss Minna Hecker, coloratura soprano, who sang. Forming the background for the cathedral candelabra holding burning white tapers and floor baskets containing Easter lilies were stately palms and smilax. Clusters of Easter lilies tied with white satin ribbons marked the family pews.

Acting as ushers were William Henry, the bride's brother, and her cousin, Frank West Henry. Groomsmen were Robert Coleman, of Langley Field, Va.; Edwin Cranberry, Denny Williams, of Alexandria, Va.; and William Somerville, of Cumberland, Md.

Miss Dorothy Henry was her sister's maid of honor. She was beautifully gowned in a model of symphony blue net and lace, the snug-fitting bodice of which was trimmed with self-covered buttons extending from the neckline to the waistline. The bouffant skirt was fashioned of double layers of net. She wore a matching lame halo graced with a veil of illusion tulle and her flowers were arranged in a cascade bouquet of Better Times roses tied with satin ribbon in a matching shade.

The bridesmaids, Misses Eleanor Deas, Barbara Lee Murlin, Edna Campbell, of Drexel Hill, Pa., and Maude Kelley, of Westfield, N. J., wore gowns styled like the maid of honor's and they carried similar bouquets.

The bride was given in marriage by her father, and they were met at the altar by the groom and his best man, John D. Cleaveland, of Gladstone, N. J., his brother. The bride was gowned in a model of lustrous ivory satin fashioned with a sweetheart neckline trimmed with ivory lace which had graced her mother's wedding gown, similar lace having been inserted in the long sleeves. Her veil of imported lace was attached to her head by a coronet of orange blossoms. Her only ornament was an exquisite diamond and gold pendant which had belonged to her maternal grandmother. She carried a cascade bouquet of valley lilies, gardenias, bride's roses and orchids.

Mrs. Henry chose for her daughter's wedding a handsome gold metal cloth gown offset by brown accessories and a shoulder cluster of bronze orchids. Mrs. Cleaveland, the groom's mother, wore a beautiful dusty rose crepe gown accented by black accessories and a shoulder spray of purple orchids.

After the ceremony the bride's parents entertained at a reception at their home on Ponce de Leon

Miss Roberta Wheat Marries W. A. Wardell in Bainbridge

BAINBRIDGE, Ga., Dec. 28.—At a brilliant ceremony taking place today at the First Baptist church in this city, Miss Roberta Wheat, lovely daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Robert Forne Wheat, became the bride of Winnie Adolphus Wardell, of Charlotte, N. C., son of Mr. and Mrs. Ferman Waddell.

Dr. H. H. Shell performed the double ring ceremony at 5 o'clock in the presence of an assemblage of friends and relatives of the popular couple.

Mrs. M. E. O'Neal, organist, and Mrs. Herbert Miller, cousin of the bride, soloist, presented a musical program. The altar of the church was beautifully decorated with garlands of smilax and palms before which were placed branch-candelabra holding lighted tapers and baskets of white chrysanthemums and gladioli. The family pews were marked by clusters of white gladioli tied with white tulle bows.

Acting as groomsmen were Robert Hunter, of Charlotte, N. C.; Dr. John McCall Jr., of Rome; Wilson Stewart, of Jacksonville, Fla.; the bride's cousin, James Harrell, of Ware Shoals, S. C.; Basil Hill, of LaGrange; James Wilkinson and Grady Bell Jr., of Stuart, Fla., the event having preceded the Tech-California football game at Grant field.

The hostess was assisted in entertaining by her parents, Dr. and Mrs. John S. Wheat.

Attractive decorations, carrying out the colors of the two teams, were used effectively on the long table at which the guests were seated.

Invited for the occasion were 40 members of the college contingent, including a group of belles and their escorts.

Miss Ruth Wheat, of Bainbridge, was her sister's maid of honor. She was daintily gowned in a white lace model fashioned with a snug-fitting bodice, sweetheart neckline and leg-o'-mutton sleeves. The bouffant skirt was made of filmy white tulle. She carried a shower bouquet of red roses tied with white satin ribbon.

Mrs. John McCall Jr., of Rome, was matron of honor for her sister. She wore a gown similar to the maid of honor's and her flowers were similar.

The bridesmaids were Mesdames Hardwick Etheridge, of Donaldsonville; Oyster Wheat, of Bainbridge; William G. Simmons and John Shepard, both of Atlanta. They wore dresses styled like the maid of honor's and their flowers were similar. The flower girls, Dee Woodberry, of Bainbridge, and Mary Dale Woodberry, of Havana, Fla., wore white lace and net dresses and they carried nosegays of red roses. Lee Metcalf Jr. and Bobby Wheat, cousins of the bride, of Bainbridge, acted as ringbearers. They wore white satin suits and carried the rings on satin pillows.

The beautiful bride, who was given in marriage by her father, was met at the altar by the groom and his best man, P. H. Del Plaine, of Charlotte, N. C. The bride's loveliness was further enhanced by her gown of duchess satin fashioned along Empire lines with a snug-fitting bodice featuring a sweetheart neckline and leg-o'-mutton sleeves. The flared skirt extended to form a long train in the back. Her exquisite veil of rose point lace was caught to her hair with a wreath of orange blossoms. She carried a shower bouquet of white orchids and valley lilies. Her only ornament was a string of pearls, a gift of the groom. Her gown belongs to her sister, Mrs. John McCall Jr., of Rome, having been worn by the former Miss Maud Wheat at the time of her marriage.

After the ceremony the bride's parents entertained at a reception at their home on Shotwell street. Mrs. Wheat received her guests wearing a handsome dusty rose chiffon model trimmed with gold sequins. Completing her costume were matching accessories and a shoulder spray of pink camellias and valley lilies.

Assisting at the reception were Miss Grace King, Mesdames H. G. Bell, Gordon Chason, V. P. Wright, W. L. Wilkinson, W. M. Steele and Frank Battles Sr. Miss Mary Mac Ellington, of Rome, kept the bride's book.

Mr. Wardell and his bride departed for a wedding trip to Jacksonville and Miami. Upon their return they will reside at 110 Providence road in Charlotte, N. C. Mrs. Wardell donned for traveling a chic three-piece wool suit in shades of blue and brown accented by a matching tweed beret and brown alligator accessories. A spray of white orchids adorned her shoulder.

Atlanta's present were Mrs. W. G. Simmons, Mrs. John Shepard, Joe Aycock, Mr. and Mrs. John Merry and Mr. and Mrs. A. K. Haynes.

Miss Garrett Weds Evan L. Marbut At Church Rites

At a quiet ceremony taking place yesterday afternoon at the Covenant Presbyterian church, Miss Flora Letitia Garrett, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel A. Garrett, became the bride of Evan Lamar Marbut, son of Mr. and Mrs. Mercer Marbut. Dr. Herman L. Turner performed the marriage at 4 o'clock in the presence of the immediate families and a few close friends of the couple.

Mrs. Robert S. Lowrance Jr., organist, and Mrs. Frank Hamilton, soloist, presented a musical program. The altar was banked with stately palms and garlands of smilax, before which were placed urns of white gladioli. Branch-candelabra holding burning white tapers completed the decorations.

Acting as ushers were Frank Evans, Cleveland McKnight, M. M. Jett and James Swann.

Miss Emily Ball was the bride's maid of honor and only attendant. She wore a becoming gown of sheer Alice blue wool fashioned with a yoke trimmed with accordion pleats and a shirred girdle. She wore a hat of matching wool graced with flowers and trimmed with a matching veil. She carried an old-fashioned bouquet of pastel-shaded flowers.

The pretty blond bride was given in marriage by her brother, Edwin Eicholz. They were met at the altar by the groom and his best man, Edward Logan. The bride chose for her wedding a wine-colored costume suit trimmed with brown fur. She wore a matching hat trimmed with fur and brown accessories and carried a muff of purple orchids.

Mrs. Edwin Eicholz, the bride's sister, was gowned in a rose wool model offset by a matching hat and black accessories. A spray of gardenias adorned her shoulder. Mrs. Marbut, the groom's mother, was dressed in Soldier blue crepe accented by black accessories and a shoulder cluster of Sweetheart roses and valley lilies.

Mr. Marbut and his bride left after the ceremony for a wedding trip to Tennessee. Upon their return they will reside at 1206 Peachtree road and will become attractive additions to the married contingent of society.

Among out-of-town guests present were Cleveland McKnight, of Washington, D. C., and William Garrett, of Pensacola, Fla.

Wynn—Jones. Of widespread interest is the announcement of the marriage of Miss Evelyn Wynn, of Atlanta and Duluth, to Allison Christian Jones, which took place on December 13 at the home of the bride's sister, Mrs. Clarence Wright, on Buford highway.

The vows were spoken before an improvised altar of palms and ferns, the central decoration of which was a floor basket of white chrysanthemums and gladioli. White burning tapers lighted the room. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Edwin McGee before an assemblage of family and friends.

The blond beauty of the bride was enhanced by her wedding dress of pale pink crepe made street length, worn with black accessories. The bride's flowers were a corsage of purple throat orchids.

The bride's only attendant was her sister, Mrs. Clarence Wright, who was gowned in blue crepe worn with black accessories. Her corsage was of roses and gardenias. William Thompson was best man.

The bride's mother was becomingly gowned in black crepe with a corsage of pink roses.

After the ceremony, an informal reception was held. The bride's table was overlaid with a real lace table cloth. The three-tiered wedding cake was flanked on either side by silver candlesticks holding pink burning tapers. Punch was served from a table placed in the bay window of the dining room. The hostess was assisted in entertaining by Mrs. C. M. Frizzelle, Miss Thelma Cowart, Mrs. Winston Creech and Mrs. Johnston.

The couple left for a wedding trip to Florida. Upon their return, they will reside at 659 Kennesaw avenue, N. E., Atlanta.

Dorsey—Burbousas. The marriage of Miss Bobbie Dorsey to Jimmy Burbousas took place December 25 at 4 o'clock. The ceremony was performed by Rev. John Tate, pastor of the First Methodist church, of College Park, at his home there.

Miss Helen Burousas, Radford Dorsey, George Antonio, of Forsyth, and Miss Harriet Surrage, of Griffin, accompanied the bridal pair.

The petite blond bride wore blue velvet made with a draped bodice, wide circular skirt and short sleeves. Her hat was fashioned of tiny blue feathers, tied with a ribbon bow at the back. Her accessories were black and a spray of orchids and valley lilies adorned her shoulder.

Following the ceremony Mr. Burbousas and his bride left for a motor trip to Daytona Beach, Fla. Upon their return they will occupy an apartment in the home of Mr. and Mrs. R. P. Cotter.

Riley—McGregor.

The marriage of Miss Grace Riley to Freeman McGregor was solemnized December 19, at the home of Rev. S. O. Kimbrough.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. N. L. Riley, of Walnut Grove. Mr. McGregor is the son of Mr. and Mrs. C. N. McGregor, of Pineville, Ky. They will make their home in Anniston, Ala.

Mrs. Spearman Weds Mr. Weil At Quiet Rites

Enlisting the interest of a wide circle of friends throughout the state is the announcement of the marriage of Mrs. George Toombs Spearman, of Athens, to Robert Benedict Weil, of Greenbriar Farms, Farmington, Ga. The ceremony was quietly solemnized at noon yesterday at St. Mark Methodist church, with Dr. Lester Rumble reading the marriage service. Only members of the immediate family and a few close friends were present.

The bride chose for the ceremony a modish gown of brown wool trimmed with a quilted design and worn with a matching coat and a handsome scarf of sables. Her hat was a spring model combining brown straw and brown faille, and her accessories were in matching tones of brown. Completing her costume was a shoulder spray of bronze orchids.

Immediately after the ceremony Mr. and Mrs. Marion Bleakley, cousins of the bridegroom, entertained at a small breakfast at their home on Peachtree way in compliment to the bridal couple.

Mr. Weil and his bride left for a wedding trip to points of interest in Florida. After February 1 they will reside at Greenbriar Farms, at Farmington.

Mrs. Weil is a charming representative of a distinguished southern family. She is the sister of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Eakes Freeman, of Atlanta, and of Mr. and Mrs. B. R. Bloodworth, of Athens.

Westbrook-Fuller Wedding Performed.

MARIETTA, Ga., Dec. 28.—The wedding of Miss Mary Westbrook, of Powder Springs, to Foster Fuller, of Villa Rica, was recently performed by Dr. L. A. White at the home of the bride's cousins, Mr. and Mrs. C. W. McFarland here.

The blond beauty of the bride was enhanced by her dress of dusty rose wool made along tailored lines, with which she wore a matching hat, a black caracul coat and black accessories. Mrs. Fuller is the only daughter of the late J. A. Westbrook and Mrs. Maude Ezzard Westbrook, of Powder Springs. Her only brother is James A. Westbrook, of Atlanta.

After a brief wedding trip the young couple will reside at Powder Springs.

Attending the wedding were Mr. and Mrs. James Westbrook, of Atlanta; Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Cole, Powder Springs; Miss Elizabeth Mabry and Mrs. Susie E. Mabry.

MISS MILDRED LOUISE SPRINKLE.

Miss Sprinkle, College Park, Engaged To Clarence Garner

Prominent among the engagements announced in College Park is that of Miss Mildred Louise Sprinkle to Clarence Woodrow Garner, of Atlanta, the marriage of the popular couple to take place on January 3 at College Park Methodist church.

Miss Sprinkle is the eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Sprinkle, of College Park. The bride-elect, who is an exponent of the brunet type of beauty, is an active worker in the College Park Methodist church, holding the positions of secretary and pianist in the Sunday school and Epworth League.

The future bride's mother is the former Miss Julia Kuhns, of Atlanta, daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Julius H. Kuhns, who were prominent photographers for 50 years, his father having been the first photographer in this city. Mr. Sprinkle, the bride-elect's father, is formerly of Adamsville and Hapeville. He is affiliated with the Pullman Company in Kirkwood.

Miss Sprinkle attended the Samuel R. Young grammar school, graduating from Russell High, in East Point, in 1938. She was affiliated with the Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company, and is now connected with the Southern Bell Telephone & Telegraph Company.

Mr. Garner, son of Mr. and Mrs. E. G. Garner, was born in East Point. He resides in Atlanta, having acquired his education in the Atlanta public schools, and is now affiliated with The Atlanta Constitution. His brothers are E. D. (Jack) Garner, of College Park, and A. E. Garner, of Atlanta.

of a higher and greater goal. "I wish you a happy New Year."

General James Jackson Chapter, of Valdosta, reports the following activities: A substantial balance in the treasury at the beginning of the fall year. Mrs. B. S. Burton, chairman of library committee, has purchased a number of books and 14 more are needed to complete the files. Mrs. J. K. White Jr. having resigned as regent, Mrs. W. W. Sanders was nominated to serve.

Others appointed by the board were Mrs. J. C. Hunt, second vice regent; Mrs. B. Walter Bennett, recording secretary; Mrs. Curtis Taylor, corresponding secretary; Miss Ola Barber, registrar; Mrs. H. Y. Tillman, historian, and Mrs. Lotta Greene, auditor.

Mrs. Di Ingram, chairman of Claude Davis Ingram Student Loan Fund, reported having sent to the state treasurer, Mrs. Y. H. Yarbrough, United States Treasury bonds of the value of $4,400 for her registration. Mrs. Yarbrough sent them in turn to the state regents, University System of Georgia. Also accompanying these bonds was a check of over $500.

Notes amounting to over $700 were sent to State Regent Mrs. Thomas Mell, and after she has listed them, they were sent to the state regent of the University of Georgia. These regents are trustees of this money, which totals over $5,000.

Mrs. T. A. Baker, chairman of committee of marking historical spots, reported the erecting and unveiling of a marker in old Troupville cemetery. Her program and the key to the cemetery were appended to this report. She told of an ancient custom of erecting markers—quoting the 35th chapter of Genesis—where Jacob erected a pillar of stone at the spot where he met God—so the D. A. R. erected a marker to those awaiting God's call.

Vidalia chapter progressed under the leadership of Mrs. Gould Mosley, as regent. Other officers are Mrs. John C. Peterson, of Ailey, first vice regent; Mrs. R. M. Stanley, second vice regent; Mrs. J. E. Brown, recording secretary; Mrs. Frank Howard, corresponding secretary; Mrs. J. E. Mercer, treasurer; Mrs. G. K. Murchinson, registrar; Mrs. J. W. Palmer, historian, and Mrs. L. E. Godbee, chaplain. Eight new applicants for membership in the chapter have been received. The Vidalia chapter has members in several surrounding counties.

Mrs. Leon Slappy gave the story "A Candle in the Window," when the Council of Safety chapter met at the home of Mrs. E. B. Anderson with Mrs. J. P. Luther as co-hostess. Other members on the program included a medley of Christmas carols played by Ben Worthly and the Christmas carol, "Silent Night" sung by the chapter. Mrs. Sam Leonard presented the program. The regent, Mrs. F. C. Randall, presided. Tuberculosis seals were distributed and Volunteers were called for work in the Red Cross sewing room.

STONEWALL, Ga., Dec. 28.—Of widespread interest is the announcement made today of the marriage of Miss Kathleen Adams to Thomas Cochran, both of this city. The wedding was quietly solemnized at the home of Rev. Wilbur Stinchcomb, here.

Miss Waring, of Savannah, To Wed Mills Bee Lane Jr.

SAVANNAH, Ga., Dec. 28.—Engaging the interest of fashionable society throughout the state is the announcement made today by Dr. and Mrs. Antonio J. Waring of the engagement of their daughter, Miss Anne Waring, to Mills Bee Lane Jr., of Atlanta, formerly of Savannah.

Miss Waring, who is the only daughter of her parents, was graduated from Emma Willard school, at Troy, N. Y., in 1936 and afterwards attended Sweet Briar College in Virginia for two years.

For the past two years she has been studying with Dr. Lee Howard in Savannah and is now a registered medical technician. She made her debut in the winter of 1937-38 and is a member of the Junior League of Savannah.

Mr. Lane is the second son of Mr. and Mrs. Mills Bee Lane, of Savannah. He is a graduate of Middlesex school, Middlesex, Mass., and afterwards attended Yale University, from which he was graduated in the class of 1934. He is now first vice president of the Citizens & Southern National Bank, and for the past year has been located in the Atlanta office.

No date has been set for the wedding, which will unite two of Savannah's most prominent and influential families.

Mr. and Mrs. Hart Give Eggnog Party

A color motif of silver and white was employed in the decorations at the brilliant eggnog party given by Mr. and Mrs. Sam Hart at their home on Arden road on Friday.

The affair honored their brother and sister, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Purdy, of Baltimore, Md., who, with their small daughter, Pamela, are spending the holiday season here.

In the living room a Christmas tree, decorated with colored lights and tinsel, was placed on a mound of artificial snow. The eggnog table was covered in white tulle and posed over a cover of white satin and brilliant silver tinsel was garlanded around the table in effective design. In the dining room a color motif of red and white was used, with the silver eggnog bowl placed on a mound of red berries. Holiday greenery and red candles were arranged on the buffet.

Mrs. A. D. Grant and Miss Virginia Dairo served eggnog, and Mrs. Devoebor assisted. Mr. Lyman Johnson assisted in receiving the 200 guests.

Miss Lee Honors Quartet of Debs

One of the most interesting social events of yesterday was the luncheon at which Miss Virginia Lee entertained at the Piedmont Driving Club honoring a quartet of attractive debutantes. The lovely honor guests were Misses Margaret Winslow, Helen McDuffie, Evelyn Harrison and Jean Penfitecost.

Assisting the hostess in entertaining were Mrs. George E. Home Jr., her sister, and Miss Helen Clarke.

Guests were seated at a single long table which had for its decorative theme a "Happy New Year" motif, the unusual idea being carried out in dolls graced with ribbons inscribed with good wishes for the forthcoming year. The floral arrangements, which were placed at intervals, consisted of red and white carnations in crystal bowls and mounds of rich greenery. Completing the decorations were red and silver cellophane bells.

The honor guests were presented British War Relief emblems and red carnation boutonnieres.

Vo Hammie Johnson read the treasurer's report. Miss Mary Helen Hynes is director of the chapter. Information on a conference held before the War Between the States began, and about the Hampton Roads conference, was given by Frances Wallace and Elizabeth Irvin.

MISS ELLEN BRADSHAW, of West Point, Ga.

Miss Bradshaw, West Point, To Wed W. Howard Ector Jr.

WEST POINT, Ga., Dec. 28.—Miss Ellen Bradshaw, of West Point, Ga., announces the engagement of their daughter, Miss Ellen Bradshaw, to William Howard Ector Jr., of High Point, N. C. and West Point, Ga., the betrothal being of wide social interest.

The bride-elect is a graduate of the West Point High school and later attended Shorter College, where she received her A. B. degree and was prominently identified in all campus activities. She is now engaged as secretary in the personnel office of the Lanett mill division of the West Point Manufacturing Company.

On her maternal side Miss Bradshaw is descended from the Wood and West families of Georgia and Alabama. On her paternal side she is descended from the Bennett and Bradshaw families of

Miss Estes Is Honored At Novel Party

Miss Jeannette Estes, one of the most widely feted of the season's debutantes, was honor guest last evening at the hillbilly party at which her brother and sister, Mr. and Mrs. George Vance, of Greenville, S. C., and Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Wilson were hosts. The novel affair was held in Rex, Ga., at the country home of the debutante's parents, Dr. and Mrs. Henry Grady Estes, who assisted in entertaining the 75 invited guests.

Debutantes and friends of the popular honor guest and their escorts motored to the scene of the party, the road being paved with the exception of a brief stretch in the cabin. At the end of the paved highway, horses and wagons were stationed for the purpose of transporting the guests over the rough road to the cabin. A hillbilly orchestra, dressed in gay plaid shirts and overalls, played for dancing, and plump pigs rotated over open barbecue pits. Brunswick stew and other delicious hot dishes were served to whet keen appetites at the midnight hour.

A rustic motif prevailed in the decorations and the huge wagon wheels concealing the lights were garlanded with festive greenery.

Alabama and Georgia. Her only sister is Miss Tulu Bradshaw.

The groom-elect is the son of Mr. and Mrs. William Howard Ector, of West Point. He is a graduate of the West Point High school and received his A. B. degree from the Georgia School of Technology, where he was a member of the Anak Society and of the Scabbard and Blade.

His mother is the daughter of A. J. Haley and the late Mrs. Haley, of Heflin, Ala., pioneer settlers of that section. On his paternal side he is descended from the Ector and Taylor families of Georgia. His sister is Mrs. I. M. Gomillion, of Montgomery, and his brothers are Haley and Tom Ector. He is now assistant manager of the Center theater, of High Point, N. C.

The marriage will be solemnized in the early spring, plans to be announced later.

Miss Barbara Henry Marries Frederic Neill Cleaveland

At a late afternoon ceremony taking place yesterday at St. Luke's Episcopal church, Miss Barbara Ann Henry, lovely daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Joseph Henry, became the bride of Frederic Neill Cleaveland, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Frederic Cleaveland, of Gladstone, N. J. Rev. John Moore Walker performed the marriage at 5:30 o'clock in the presence of an assemblage of friends and relatives of the couple.

Mrs. Mabelle Horton Young, organist, accompanied Miss Minna Hecker, coloratura soprano, who sang. Forming the background for the ceremony were candelabra holding burning white tapers and floor baskets containing Easter lilies. Clusters of Easter lilies tied with white satin ribbons marked the family pews.

Acting as ushers were William Henry, the bride's brother, and her cousin, Frank West Henry. Groomsmen were Robert Coleman, of Langley Field, Va.; Edwin Granberry, Denny Williams, of Alexandria, Va.; and William Somerville, of Cumberland, Md.

Miss Dorothy Henry was her sister's maid of honor. She was beautifully gowned in a model of symphony blue net and lace, the snug-fitting bodice of which was trimmed with self-covered buttons extending from the neckline to the waistline. The bouffant skirt was fashioned of double layers of net. She wore a matching lame half-graced with a veil of illusion tulle and her flowers were arranged in a cascade bouquet of Better Times roses tied with satin ribbon in a matching shade.

The bridesmaids, Misses Eleanor Deas, Barbara Lee Murlin, Edna Campbell, of Drexel Hill, Pa., and Maude Kelley, of Westfield, N. J., wore gowns styled like the maid of honor's and they carried similar bouquets.

The bride was given in marriage by her father, and they were met at the altar by the groom and his best man, John D. Cleaveland, of Gladstone, N. J., his brother. The bride was gowned in a model of lustrous ivory satin fashioned with a sweetheart neckline trimmed with ivory lace which had graced her mother's wedding gown, similar lace having been inserted in the long sleeves. Her veil of imported lace was attached to her head by a coronet of orange blossoms. Her only ornament was an exquisite diamond and gold pendant which had belonged to her maternal grandmother. She carried a cascade bouquet of valley lilies, gardenias, bride's roses and orchids.

Mrs. Henry chose for her daughter's wedding a handsome gold metal cloth gown offset by brown accessories and a shoulder cluster of bronze orchids. Mrs. Cleaveland, the groom's mother, wore a beautiful dusty rose crepe gown accented by black accessories and a shoulder spray of purple orchids.

After the ceremony the bride's parents entertained at a reception at their home on Ponce de Leon avenue for the out-of-town guests, relatives and wedding personnel.

The dining table was centered with tiered cake the base of which was surrounded by bride's roses, valley lilies, and swainsons, similar floral arrangements also decorating the buffet. The living room was decorated with palms and baskets of Easter lilies.

Mr. Cleaveland and his bride left for a wedding trip, and upon their return they will reside in Durham, N. C., at 1507 West Pettigrew street. Mrs. Cleaveland donned for traveling a chic soldier blue wool costume suit trimmed with a blue fox collar. She wore brown accessories and a shoulder spray of white orchids.

Among out-of-town guests present were, Mr. and Mrs. John F. Cleaveland, parents of the groom; Mr. and Mrs. John D. Cleaveland, Miss Carol Cleaveland, all of Gladstone, N. J.; Miss Anne Seawell, Durham, N. C.; Miss Florence Moss, Mobile, Ala.; Miss Anne Pridmore, Daytona Beach, Fla.; Miss Blossom Henry, Pittsburgh, Pa.; Mr. and Mrs. Gordon McKenzie, Ashburn.

Miss Betty Hurt Fetes Visitor at Breakfast.

Among gay affairs of the Yuletide was the breakfast given yesterday morning at the Druid Hills Golf Club by Miss Betty Hurt for her guest, Miss Emily Leach, of Stuart, Fla., the event having preceded the Tech-California football game at Grant field.

The hostess was assisted in entertaining by her parents, Dr. and Mrs. John S. Hurt.

Attractive decorations, carrying out the colors of the two teams, were used effectively on the long table at which the guests were seated.

Invited for the occasion were 40 members of the college contingent, including a group of belles and their escorts.

BAINBRIDGE, Ga., Dec. 28.—At a brilliant ceremony taking place today at the First Baptist church in this city, Miss Roberta Wheat, lovely daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Robert Forne Wheat, became the bride of Winnifred Adolphus Wardell, of Charlotte, N. C., son of Mr. and Mrs. Ferman Waddell. Dr. H. H. Shell performed the double ring ceremony at 5 o'clock in the presence of an assemblage of friends and relatives of the popular couple.

Mrs. M. E. O'Neal, organist, and Mrs. Herbert Miller, cousin of the bride, soloist, presented a musical program. The altar of the church was beautifully decorated with garlands of smilax and palms before which were placed branches of candelabra holding lighted tapers and floor baskets of white chrysanthemums and gladioli. The family pews were marked by clusters of white gladioli tied with white tulle bows.

Acting as groomsmen were Robert Hunter, of Charlotte, N. C.; Dr. John McCall Jr., of Rome; Wilson Stewart, of Jacksonville, Fla.; the bride's cousin, James Harrell, of Ware Shoals, S. C.; Basil Hill, of LaGrange; James Wilkinson and Grady Bell Jr., cousins of the bride, both of Bainbridge.

Bride's Attendants. Miss Ruth Wheat, of Bainbridge, was her sister's maid of honor. She was daintily gowned in a white lace model fashioned with a snug-fitting bodice, sweetheart neckline and leg-o'-mutton sleeves. The bouffant skirt was made of filmy white tulle. She carried a shower bouquet of red roses tied with white satin ribbon. Mrs. John McCall Jr., of Rome, was matron of honor for her sister. She wore a gown similar to the maid of honor's and her flowers were similar.

The bridesmaids were Mesdames Hardwick, of Donaldsonville; Osler Wheat, of Bainbridge; William G. Simmons and John Shepard, both of Atlanta. They wore dresses styled like the maid of honor's and their flowers were similar. The flower girls, Dee Woodberry, of Bainbridge, and Mary Dale Woodberry, of Havana, Fla., wore white lace and net dresses and they carried nosegays of red roses. Lee Metcalf Jr. and Bobby Wheat, cousins of the bride, of Bainbridge, acted as ringbearers. They wore white satin suits and carried the rings on satin pillows.

The beautiful bride, who was given in marriage by her father, was met at the altar by the groom and his best man, P. H. Del Plaine, of Charlotte, N. C. The bride's loveliness was further enhanced by her gown of duchess satin fashioned along Empire lines with a snug-fitting bodice featuring a sweetheart neckline and leg-o'-mutton sleeves. The flared skirt extended to form a long train in the back. Her exquisite veil of rose point lace was caught to her hair with a wreath of orange blossoms. She carried a shower bouquet of white orchids and valley lilies. Her only ornament was a string of pearls, a gift of the groom. Her gown belongs to her sister, Mrs. John McCall Jr., of Rome, having been worn by the former Miss Maud Wheat at the time of her marriage.

Reception Held. After the ceremony the bride's parents entertained at a reception at their home on Shotwell street. Mrs. Wheat received her guests wearing a handsome dusty rose chiffon model trimmed with gold sequins. Completing her costume were matching accessories and a shoulder spray of pink camellias and valley lilies.

Assisting at the reception were Miss Grace King, Mesdames H. G. Bell, Gordon Chason, V. P. Wright, W. L. Wilkinson, W. M. Steele and Frank Battles Sr. Miss Mary Mae Ellington, of Rome, kept the bride's book.

Mr. Wardell and his bride departed for a wedding trip to Jacksonville and Miami. Upon their return they will reside at 110 Providence road in Charlotte, N. C. Mrs. Wardell donned for traveling a chic three-piece wool suit in shades of blue and brown accented by a matching tweed beret and brown alligator accessories. A spray of white orchids adorned her shoulder.

Atlantans present were Mrs. W. G. Simmons, Mrs. John Shepard, Joe Aycock, Mr. and Mrs. John Merry and Mr. and Mrs. A. K. Haynes.

Miss Garrett Weds Evan L. Marbut At Church Rites

At a quiet ceremony taking place yesterday afternoon at the Covenant Presbyterian church, Miss Flora Letitia Garrett, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel A. Garrett, became the bride of Evan Lamar Marbut, son of Mr. and Mrs. Mercer Marbut. Dr. Herman L. Turner performed the marriage at 4 o'clock in the presence of the immediate families and a few close friends of the couple.

Mrs. Robert S. Lowrance Jr., organist, and Mrs. Frank Hamilton, soloist, presented a musical program. The altar was banked with stately palms and garlands of smilax, before which were placed urns of white gladioli. Branched candelabra holding burning white tapers completed the decorations.

Acting as ushers were Frank Evans, Cleveland McKnight, M. M. Jett and James Swann.

Miss Emily Ball was the bride's maid of honor and only attendant. She wore a becoming gown of sheer Alice blue wool fashioned with a yoke trimmed with accordion pleats and a shirred girdle. She wore a hat of matching wool graced with flowers and trimmed with a matching veil. She carried an old-fashioned bouquet of pastel-shaded flowers.

The pretty blond bride was given in marriage by her brother, Edwin Eicholz. They were met at the altar by the groom and his best man, Edward Logan. The bride chose for her wedding a wine-colored costume suit trimmed with brown fur. She wore a matching hat trimmed with fur and brown accessories and carried a muff of purple orchids.

Mrs. Edwin Eicholz, the bride's sister, was gowned in a rose wool model offset by a matching hat and black accessories. A spray of gardenias adorned her shoulder. Mrs. Marbut, the groom's mother, was dressed in Soldier blue crepe accented by black accessories and a shoulder cluster of Sweetheart roses and valley lilies.

Mr. Marbut and his bride left after the ceremony for a wedding trip to Tennessee. Upon their return they will reside at 1206 Peachtree road and will become attractive additions to the married contingent of society.

Among out-of-town guests present were Cleveland McKnight, of Washington, D. C., and William Garrett, of Pensacola, Fla.

Wynn—Jones.

Of widespread interest is the announcement of the marriage of Miss Evelyn Wynn, of Atlanta and Duluth, to Allison Christian Jones, which took place on December 13 at the home of the bride's sister, Mrs. Clarence Wright, on Buford highway.

The vows were spoken before an improvised altar of palms and ferns, the central decoration of which was a floor basket of white chrysanthemums and gladioli. White burning tapers lighted the room. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Edwin McGee before an assemblage of family and friends.

The blond beauty of the bride was enhanced by her wedding dress of pale pink crepe made street length, worn with black accessories. The bride's flowers were a corsage of purple throat orchids.

The bride's only attendant was her sister, Mrs. Clarence Wright, who was gowned in blue crepe worn with black accessories. Her corsage was of roses and gardenias. William Thompson was best man.

The bride's mother was becomingly gowned in black crepe with a corsage of pink roses.

After the ceremony, an informal reception was held. The bride's table was overlaid with a real lace table cloth. The three-tiered wedding cake was flanked on either side by silver candlesticks holding pink burning tapers. Punch was served from a table placed in the bay window of the dining room. The hostess was assisted in entertaining by Mrs. C. M. Frizzelle, Miss Thelma Cowart, Mrs. Winston Creech and Mrs. Johnston.

The couple left for a wedding trip to Florida. Upon their return, they will reside at 659 Kennesaw avenue, N. E., Atlanta.

Dorsey—Burbousas.

The marriage of Miss Bobbie Dorsey to Jimmy Burbousas took place December 25 at 4 o'clock. The ceremony was performed by Rev. John Tate, pastor of the First Methodist church, of College Park, at his home there.

Miss Helen Burbousas, Radford Dorsey, George Antonio, of Forsyth, and Miss Harriet Suffrage, of Griffin, accompanied the bridal pair.

The petite blond bride wore blue velvet made with a draped bodice, wide circular skirt and short sleeves. Her hat was fashioned of tiny blue feathers, tied with a ribbon bow at the back. Her accessories were black and a spray of orchids and valley lilies adorned her shoulder.

Following the ceremony Mr. Burbousas and his bride left for a motor trip to Daytona Beach, Fla. Upon their return they will occupy an apartment in the home of Mr. and Mrs. R. P. Cotter.

Riley—McGregor.

The marriage of Miss Grace Riley to Freeman McGregor was solemnized December 19, at the home of Rev. S. O. Kimbrough.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. N. L. Riley, of Walnut Grove. Mr. McGregor is the son of Mr. and Mrs. C. N. McGregor, of Pineville, Ky. They will make their home in Anniston, Ala.

MISS GRACE SARAH WARD.

Miss Sarah Ward To Marry Tom B. Anderson Next June

Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Astley Ward, of Selma, Ala., announce the engagement and approaching marriage of their daughter, Grace Sarah, to Tom B. Anderson, of Birmingham, Ala., and Shreveport, La. The wedding will take place in June.

Miss Ward graduated from Agnes Scott College in the class of 1940, and is at present a member of the administration staff there. As a student at Agnes Scott, she was president of the freshman dormitory and a member of the executive council of student government.

She held a position on the cabinet of the student Christian Association for two years, and for three years was on the student committee of the College Public Lecture Association.

Mr. Anderson is the son of Mr. and Mrs. David Perrin Anderson, of Birmingham, and is assistant pastor of the First Presbyterian church in Shreveport.

He was graduated from Davidson College and Columbia Theological Seminary. He also attended Vanderbilt University. Mr. Anderson is a member of the A. T. O. social fraternity.

W. C. T. U. of Georgia

Mrs. Mary Harris Armor, Atlanta, Editor.

A happy New Year to every reader of this column! Though every heart bleeds for the sorrows of the world, though much of the earth is ablaze with hate, and war stalks through the lands across the seas, choosing its victims, and though America confronts the menace of being drawn into this whirlpool of death and destruction in spite of all this each of us may have and give a happy New Year. No matter what is in the future, God is there and is able under any circumstances to make every surrendered life with health and work and prayer and praise and "helpful ministry to needy folk." The Scripture tells us that "Moses entered into the thick darkness where God was," though the way is dark, one may "Touch God's right hand in that darkness and be lifted up and strengthened." So may each of the readers of this column have a happy New Year which brings an increase of hope, faith and love, and a new realization of the presence of God.

The 1941 Week of Prayer extends from January 3 to 12. The general theme is, "Christ the Answer to the World's Needs." Dr. Robert E. Speer has prepared as topics for consideration: Sunday, "The World and Its Need of Christ"; Monday, "The Sufferings of Nations"; Tuesday, "The Sufficiency of God"; Wednesday, "Jesus Christ is the Answer"; Thursday, "The Responsibility of America"; Friday, "The Church and Its Business"; Saturday, "The Gospel for Today"; Sunday, "The Coming Kingdom."

Mrs. T. O. Hathcock, president of Fifth District W. C. T. U., urges a full attendance on January 3 at Grace Methodist church. The morning session opens promptly at 10 o'clock. There will be an hour for lunch and social contacts, 12:30 to 1:30. The afternoon session adjourns at 3 o'clock.

Mrs. R. H. McDougall, membership campaign director, says the new W. C. T. U. year has begun magnificently; there is a new determination, a new enthusiasm in the ranks. Already more than half of the membership has paid dues for 1941; the "Rock of Ages" pledges are coming in rapidly and many new members have been secured.

Mrs. Jennie Sibley Lamb, president of Union Point W. C. T. U., sends this cheery note: "We had a good meeting yesterday afternoon; acquired two new members and one honorary. Our flower and bulb sale, held in Wayside Park, which we have beautified, and in which there is a mounted tablet bearing the names of the 14 women who carried on the soldiers' Wayside Home during the Civil War, netted us enough to pay balance on budget for 1940-41. We did Red Cross sewing in connection with our last meeting, totalling about 50 articles made by our union in the last two months. Some did the work at home. Also arranged at this last meeting for our relief boxes."

A letter received from Mrs. H. J. Maddox, of Bainbridge, says: "Bainbridge W. C. T. U. will have a chop suey supper for Chinese relief. We are going to do something about liquor in the camps, either by letter or petitions, or both. I am so happy to say that our new Methodist preacher, Mr. Heisler, is one of us from the ground up, and he looks about seven feet high. He is the man who led the fight which dried Quitman. It is fine to have him here in view of the fact that we will entertain the state convention in October."

Mrs. T. J. Hamby, president of the Marietta W. C. T. U., writes: "Our union sponsored a supper recently which netted us $15, which will help us to do some extra work. Our Y. T. C. is doing so well; 30 met at my home last Wednesday evening. Twice as many boys as girls now belong."

The Gainesville union, for the third time, is sponsoring a lighted Christmas tree for the colored people to be placed on Athens street for the pleasure of their people, and Gainesville W. C. T. U. bears the expense. The tree will be lighted till New Year. Mrs. Carl Brittain, of Gainesville, has accepted the vice presidency of the Ninth District W. C. T. U., working with Mrs. Robert Smith, of Canton, who is district president.

All W. C. T. U. members do not by any means belong to the Prohibition party; do not all other temperance advocates belong; there is a tremendous temperance sentiment in Georgia, in spite of the fact that Roger Babson, presidential candidate on the Prohibition party ticket, polled only 1,003 votes in the November election. This is the largest Prohibition party vote polled in Georgia in many years—certainly since the editor of this column can remember.

Miss Butler Fetes Miss Gladys Parr.

Miss Marian Butler was hostess at 8:30 o'clock last evening at a buffet dinner and eggnog party in compliment to her guest, Miss Gladys Parr, of Athens, who is an attractive visitor here. The affair took place at the home of the hostess on Clifton road.

Garlands of greenery and clusters of cellophane bells adorned the home, and Mrs. J. M. Akridge Jr. assisted her sister in receiving the 40 invited guests.

Engagement Is Announced On Groom-Elect's Birthday

By Sally Forth.

• • • IF YOU SHOULD happen to consult Ellis Gay about the very nicest birthday present he ever had, he'd be quick to tell you that today's present tops them all—the announcement of his betrothal to lovely, titian-haired Mary McGaughey! Since he could not be here on any Sunday in the near future, his bride-to-be decided that, in his absence, the next best thing would be to have the announcement appear on his birthday, which occurs today.

Though the future groom spent Christmas Day here, he arrived only the day before and was compelled to return to Florida the day after. He is, as you probably know, a lieutenant in the 326th Infantry Reserve and is on active duty with the Corps Area service command at Fort Barrancas in Pensacola, Fla.

Mary and Ellis have selected February 10 as the date for their wedding, and since the latter will still be on duty, they will reside in Pensacola. They have already chosen an attractive house of buff-colored stucco, which is situated on the bay and is one of a charming group of little houses in a picturesque section known as Hutchinson Court. Conveniently located, the house is only three blocks from the Pensacola Country Club, where idle hours will find the couple indulging in the various pleasures afforded by club life.

The bride-elect's exquisite engagement ring is worthy of special attention, for it is not set with the usual diamond. Instead there is a sparkling emerald, surrounded by diamonds and mounted in platinum, for the emerald is Mary's favorite jewel.

Needless to say, her marriage to the prominent young Atlantan will be preceded by a veritable whirl of prenuptial parties, for aside from her important family connections, Mary enjoys enviable popularity among her contemporaries.

• • • SALLY HAD BEGUN to think that the old-fashioned method of asking fathers for their daughters' hands in marriage had gone the way of smelling salts and reticules. That is, until she heard that Hagood Clarke Jr. is one of the young moderns who still cling to some of those charming manners that should never have gone out of style at all.

It was last summer that Hagood went down to Miami Beach to visit Ann Hurt, with the determination to ask her father, Joel Hurt, if he would be acceptable as a son-in-law. Ann, of course, already had been consulted. Things were very gay socially, with parties several times a day, and the result was that Hagood found no suitable opportunity for asking such an important question.

Finally, the last evening of his visit rolled around, and in sheer desperation he managed to corner Mr. Hurt in the prosaic atmosphere of no less a place than the kitchen of the home where they were attending a dinner party!

There were no objections, of course, and shortly afterwards Ann received her handsome engagement ring and the formal announcement of their betrothal.

Georgia Department

American Legion Auxiliary

Mrs. L. M. Dewell, Atlanta, Editor.

Those of us of the American Legion Auxiliary who were able to visit our World War veterans in the hospitals and in their homes during the holiday season were more than repaid and Lowell's immortal words sounded anew: "Not what we give, but what we share—for the gift without the giver is bare." After visiting the wards on Monday evening, a most enjoyable party was held in the recreation hall at Hospital 48, sponsored by Walter M. Slaton unit, Macon No. 3, Griffin, Gainesville, Jonesboro and Dalton units, and other organizations. Delicious refreshments were served and the Atlanta Civic orchestra and other features were presented.

Veterans' hostess calendar for January is as follows: Augusta Hospital No. 62, Waycross, Quitman, Brunswick and Warrenton; Atlanta Hospital No. 48, Cartersville, Americus and West End; Milledgeville, Waynesboro unit. The New Year's Eve party at Hospital 48 will be sponsored by the Georgia Department of the American Legion.

Mrs. Carleton R. McQuown, department child welfare chairman, of the Auxiliary for the fourth consecutive year, has been presented by her unit, of Decatur, as a candidate for office of first vice president of the Georgia Department for 1941-42. Mrs. McQuown has been active in the National Child Welfare committee of the American Legion, and as alternate fifth district director.

Mrs. H. C. Hearn, of Bellville, first district director, reports a new unit organized at Glennville with the following officers installed: President, Mrs. R. B. Baxter; first vice president, Mrs. W. B. Baxter; second vice president, Mrs. T. M. Fouché; secretary, Mrs. Ralph Huckabee; treasurer, Mrs. Essie Durrence; historian, Mrs. H. P. Kicklighter; chaplain, Mrs. E. C. Davidson; sergeant at arms, Mrs. J. L. Purcell. Mrs. Hearn states that 10 members of the Legion and Auxiliary of Claxton attended, enjoying an oyster supper given by the Glennville post. The organization meeting was held on December 10th.

The Athens unit held its December meeting with Mrs. R. L. Keener, and the president, Mrs. W. L. Florence, presiding. A committee headed by Mrs. A. G. Gann was appointed to serve with the Legion in local Christmas work for disabled veterans and families. Good reports were given by Mesdames D. W. Bridges and C. A. VerNoy, rehabilitation and child welfare chairmen, and by the Legion fair committee. During the program Christmas carols were sung and solos given by Miss Thelma Elis among today's important social news.

Their marriage, which will be an event of March, is anticipated with delight by their friends, who are eagerly awaiting Ann's return to her former home for residence.

Hagood is now in Miami Beach and when he returns just after the New Year, he will be accompanied by Ann and her mother, who will spend several days here for trousseau shopping. Ann will be the guest of Ann Irby at her home on Brookhaven drive, while Mrs. Hurt will be the guest of her sister, Mrs. George Weyman, on Peachtree-Dunwoody road.

• • • SIGNAL HONOR has been accorded Charles M. Brawner, of this city, who has two original poems published in "Poets of America, 1940, Democracy Speaks," a 700-page volume just off the press!

Charles, you know, is the gifted son of Dr. and Mrs. James N. Brawner. His poems, "Creation" and "The Conqueror's Fate," were composed only recently, and dwell upon subjects of unusual depth for an amateur poet.

MISS MARY CROFT.

Miss Mary Croft To Marry Mr. Hebblewhite in January

Attracting sincere interest in Atlanta and the south is the engagement of Miss Mary Croft and Rives Hebblewhite, announced today by the mother of the bride-elect, Mrs. Robert Madison Croft. The marriage will be solemnized in January.

Miss Croft is a graduate of Girls' High school and the Atlanta Law school and is a member of the Iota Tau national legal sorority. She is associated with the Fulton National Bank of Atlanta.

Her father was the late Robert Madison Croft, of West Point, of Boston, Mass. Her paternal grandparents were Judge George N. Croft and Charlotte Cherry Croft, of West Point, Ga. Miss Croft is a descendant of the Croft family who originally settled at Charleston, S. C., and from David Reese, sister of the Mecklenburg Declaration. She is related to the Crenshaw, Elmore and Cherry families of Alabama.

Mr. Hebblewhite is the only son of Mrs. Eloise Rives Hebblewhite, formerly of Birmingham, Ala., and the late Harry Hebblewhite. He was graduated from the Alabama Polytechnic Institute, Auburn, where he was a member of Tau Beta Phi and Phi Kappa Phi, and from Woodrow Wilson Law school, Atlanta. He is associated with the Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Company.

His father lived in Toronto, Canada, and Chicago, Ill., being the son of Thomas Hebblewhite of Lincolnshire, England, later of London and Toronto. His paternal grandmother was Elizabeth Playford, of Norfolk, England, granddaughter of Sir Thomas Playford.

On his mother's side he is descended from the Agee family of Huguenot extraction and the Rives family, both of whom settled in Alabama, his maternal grandparents being Estelle Agee and Robert Rives.

Mr. Hebblewhite is the only son of Mrs. Eloise Rives Hebblewhite, formerly of Birmingham, Ala., and the late Harry Hebblewhite. He was graduated from the Alabama Polytechnic Institute, Auburn, where he was a member of Tau Beta Phi and Phi Kappa Phi, and from Woodrow Wilson Law school, Atlanta. He is associated with the Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Company.

Officers are: Mrs. J. H. Lorenz, president; Mrs. B. B. Medlock, first vice; Miss Marguerite Steadman, second vice; Mrs. W. L. Frew, recording secretary; Mrs. James F. Watson, treasurer; Mrs. A. J. Shropshire, corresponding secretary; and Mrs. W. R. Granberry, chaplain.

Mrs. William M. Leppard is general chairman of arrangements for the party, assisted by Mrs. W. T. Coleman and Mrs. C. C. Barton. Receiving at the door with Mrs. Leppard will be Mesdames F. M. Crout, W. E. Upchurch and C. M. Mesauglin. In charge of refreshments will be Mrs. O. M. Cofer and Mrs. O. R. Randall. Pouring coffee will be Mrs. W. J. Mitchell and Mrs. M. D. Berry.

In charge of the guest book are Mrs. A. M. Wade and Mrs. Allison. Mrs. W. O. Gaffne, will arrange the program. Assisting in entertaining guests will be Mesdames Leroy Bates, R. I. Leiby, George Lesene, C. C. Barton and W. T. Coleman.

Miss Plant Weds Edward S. Jenkins.

ATHENS, Ga., Dec. 28.—The marriage of Miss Grace Plant, daughter of Mrs. T. A. Plant, of Grantville, Ga., to Edward Stone Jenkins, son of Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Jenkins, was performed December 21, at 5:30 o'clock in the First Methodist church, of Athens, by the Rev. R. C. Singleton.

The bride was lovely in a becoming beige three-piece suit with trimmings of fox fur, and hat and accessories to match. Her shoulder spray was of pink roses.

The popular young couple are both graduates of the Grantville High school and the groom attended the University of Georgia. After a wedding trip Mr. and Mrs. Jenkins will reside in Grantville.

Miss Anne Griffin Marries Edward Brewster at Sunset

CEDARTOWN, Ga., Dec. 28.—The marriage of Miss Anne Griffin and Edward Brewster was solemnized December 21 at sunset at the First Methodist church before an assemblage of friends and relatives.

Rev. Nath Thompson officiated and music was presented by Thomas Thompson, organist, and Miss Caroline Smith, vocalist. Candles were lighted by Bobbie Griffin, brother of the bride, and Van Brewster, brother of the groom.

Miss Nancy Jim Sally was maid of honor and the bridesmaids were Miss Julia Ann Florence, Miss Flo Powell, of Rockmart; Miss Jane Brewster and Miss Sadie Griffin, only sister of the bride. They were gowned alike in ice blue chiffon made with shirred bodices and long full skirts, and wore blue satin ribbons in their hair. They carried bouquets of talisman roses and snapdragons tied with ice blue satin ribbon.

The usher groomsmen were George Vance Jr., Ray Carroll, Reuben Pickett, of Atlanta, and Charles Brewster, brother of the groom. Mr. Brewster's brother, Virgil Brewster Jr., was his best man.

The bride entered with her father, J. R. Griffin. She wore a gown of white net and lace combined. Her veil was of net and fastened to her hair with orange blossoms. The veil formed a long train. She carried a bouquet of bride's roses showered with lilies of the valley.

After the ceremony, Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Griffin, parents of the bride, entertained the wedding party, and out-of-town guests at a reception at their home, after which Mr. Brewster and his bride left for a wedding trip. Mrs. Brewster traveled in a becoming model of aqua crepe with red fox fur jacket. Her accessories were brown.

After their return Mr. and Mrs. Brewster will reside here, where the groom is engaged in business with his father, Virge Brewster, in the operation of the Brewster Mercantile Company.

always the NEW
at Regenstein's Peachtree

Regenstein's Peachtree is the magic carpet that whisks you from winter doldrums into an exciting new season. Sparkling new fashions on every floor bring new hope and Spring into your very soul. Luscious pastel ensembles (wool coat and crepe dress) are irresistible. Belting roll-er hats from California are just as suitable for Peachtree as for Palm Beach. Obey that urge to come out in white by snuggling into an angelic angora coat . . . or be smartly conspicuous in a bright red or a lustrous pastel plaid. A shiny black patent or lacquer red bag will put the old oomph in your winter ensemble. Spotless white gloves or a white necktie will give you that "spring can't be far behind" feeling. Every day of the year . . . you'll find the NEW, the original, the fashion-right at Regenstein's Peachtree.

Miss McGaughey And Ellis Gay To Wed Feb. 10

No announcement of the season bears greater social import than that made today by Mr. and Mrs. Frank Samuel McGaughey of the betrothal of their daughter, Miss Mary Haverly McGaughey, to William Ellis Gay, of Atlanta and Pensacola, Fla. The marriage of the popular young couple, which unites families who have been prominent for generations in the social, cultural and financial development of the state, will be a brilliant event of Monday, February 10.

Miss McGaughey is the only daughter of her parents and the sister of Frank S. McGaughey, Jr. and James J. Haverly McGaughey, of Atlanta. She received her early education at Sacred Heart school, after which she attended Washington Seminary, where she was a member of the Pi Pi sorority. Later she enrolled at Marymount Academy at Tarrytown, N. Y., and subsequently graduated from Marymount College in Tarrytown. Among the honors conferred upon her at Marymount was membership in the honor society, Children of Mary, and editorship of the college paper. She completed her education by wide travel in this country and in continental Europe.

The bride-elect, who is one of the most attractive and admired members of Atlanta social ranks, was formally presented to society with the Debutante Club of 1939-40. She is a member of the Atlanta Junior League and also holds membership in the Girls' Circle for Tallulah Falls and the Rabun Gap-Nacoochee Junior Guild.

She inherits much of her charm and graciousness from her lovely mother, who before her marriage was Miss Margaret Haverly, daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Haverly. The Haverly name has been prominently identified with the building of Atlanta since Civil War days, the late Mr. Haverly having ranked as one of the city's first citizens. He founded the chain of furniture stores known as the Haverly Furniture Company and was outstanding as a patron of art and music. Mr. Haverly was one of the founders of the Atlanta Art Association and an ardent supporter of grand opera and other cultural activities here. The advancement of art in Atlanta has felt his influence, perhaps, more than that of any other citizen, and he was recognized as a connoisseur of paintings and sculpture.

The bride-elect's father is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Samuel McGaughey, leading citizens of Greenville, Tenn., and White Plains, Ga. He is president of the Capitol Electric Company of Atlanta.

The bride-elect is of the distinctive Titian type, her fair skin and gray-green eyes forming a perfect complement for her honey-gold hair. She possesses a vivacious and friendly manner that have made her a sought-after figure, and since making her debut

Frey-Bailey Marriage Set For Today

MARIETTA, Ga., Dec. 28.—Miss Virginia Frey, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Mayes C. Frey, will be married Sunday afternoon to Lieutenant James Davis Bailey, son of Mr. and Mrs. John D. Bailey, of Athens. Rev. Henry Jones, of Atlanta, will read the marriage lines at the First Methodist church in the presence of relatives and friends.

A mass of foliage banked against the altar rail will be beautified with tall floor baskets of Easter lilies. Candelabra, holding cathedral tapers, will complete the church decorations.

Miss Ruth Gantt, of Atlanta, cousin of the bride-elect, will render a musical program and Mrs. B. F. Boatner will sing.

Little Connie Conway, daughter of Mrs. Odene Conway, will be flower girl, and Paul Baker, small cousin of the bride-elect, will be ringbearer. Charles Bailey will be his brother's best man.

Miss Marthalyn Dickson, the only bridesmaid, will wear pink taffeta with flower hat to match, and she will carry a colonial bouquet of pink roses and forget-me-nots.

The bride-elect will wear white satin, made with leg-o-mutton sleeves, a full bouffant skirt and built-in train. Her veil of illusion tulle, arranged coronet fashion, is edged with seed pearls. Her bouquet will be fashioned of white roses and orchids.

Mr. and Mrs. Frey will entertain at an informal reception for the out-of-town guests after the ceremony.

Miss Frey attended the Marietta High school, where she was an honor graduate, and later graduated from the University of Georgia, where she was a member of Alpha Gamma Delta sorority and of Phi Kappa Phi honorary fraternity. Her mother was formerly Miss Nolin Ragland, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Ragland, of Commerce, Texas. Her paternal grandparents were W. Martin Frey and Elizabeth Sewell Frey, pioneers of South Carolina and Cobb county.

Lieutenant Bailey has two brothers, Charles and John Ernest Bailey, of Athens. He is descended from the Baileys, of Georgia, and the Adams family, of South Carolina. After graduating from Athens High school, he attended the University of Georgia, where he was a member of Phi Kappa Alpha fraternity. For a time he was employed by the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company and is now a lieutenant of the regular army, stationed at Fort Jackson, Columbia, S. C.

After a wedding journey Lieutenant Bailey and his bride will reside at Fort Jackson.

Lovely Principals In Future Wedding Ceremonies

Miss Mary Haverly McGaughey.

Miss Virginia Callaway, of LaGrange and Blue Springs.

Miss Julia Collier Keenan, of Berkeley, Cal.

Miss Ann Bright Hurt, of Miami Beach, Fla.

Miss Callaway Betrothed To Lt. Mart Bailey Jr., U.S.A.

Focusing the interest of fashionable southern society, both in army and civilian circles, is the announcement made today by Mr. and Mrs. Cason J. Callaway, of LaGrange and Blue Springs, of the engagement of their daughter, Miss Virginia Hand Callaway, to Lieutenant Benjamin Mart Bailey Jr., Cavalry, United States army. No date has been set for the wedding, plans for which will be announced later.

A charming representative of one of the state's most prominent families, Miss Callaway is the only daughter of her parents, the sister of Cason Callaway Jr., and Howard Callaway. On her paternal side she is the granddaughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Fuller E. Callaway, of LaGrange, who were numbered among Georgia's first citizens. The late Mr. Callaway was nationally known as a textile manufacturer, and as founder of one of the south's leading textile industries, Callaway Mills, which the bride-elect's father headed until his retirement from active business in 1938. Since then he has devoted his time to the development of his estate at Blue Springs, which is one of the show places of the state.

A leader in business and educational circles, Mr. Callaway is chairman of the Board of Regents of the University System of Georgia. He is a past president of both the state and the national Associations of Cotton Manufacturers.

The future bride bears the full name of her lovely mother, the former Miss Virginia Hand, daughter of Mrs. Judson L. Hand and the late Mr. Hand, of Pelham, who contributed largely to the development of south Georgia. She is the great-granddaughter of Mrs. Florence Davenport Hollis, pioneer resident of Americus. Among her Atlanta relatives are her maternal aunts, Mrs. Thomas P. Hinman,

Miss Julia Collier Keenan Will Marry R. E. Marble

BERKELEY, Cal., Dec. 28.—Mr. and Mrs. William Hubbard Keenan, of Berkeley, announce the engagement of their daughter, Miss Julia Collier Keenan, to Robert Emerson Marble, of Pasadena, Cal., the marriage to take place here early in February at St. Clements church.

Miss Keenan attended Stanford University, where she was a member of Kappa Kappa Gamma sorority and she is also a member of the Junior League. Her mother is the former Miss Eleanor Collier, of Atlanta, and her grandparents are the late Mr. and Mrs. Charles A. Collier, of Atlanta, and Mrs. Peter Keenan and the late Mr. Keenan, of New Orleans. The bride-elect's aunts are Mrs. Julian LaRose Harris, of Chattanooga, Tenn.; Mrs. Robert W. Davis, of Atlanta, Ga.; and Mrs. Henry Thompson Stanton, of Wayne, Ill. Her uncles are John Collier, of Washington, D. C.; Charles A. Collier, of Atlanta, and the late William Rawson Collier.

Blond and attractive, Miss Keenan is quite charming and is very fond of athletics. She is of medium height, has expressive blue eyes and light brown hair.

Mr. Marble graduated from Stanford University, where he was a member of Alpha Delta Phi fraternity and attended the Stanford Graduate School of Business. His parents are Mr. and Mrs. John F. Marble, of Pasadena, and his brother is John M. Marble, also of Pasadena. His sister is Mrs. John Hinrick, of Philadelphia.

Miss Ann Hurt, Miami Beach, Fla., To Wed Hagood Clarke Jr., of Atlanta, in March

MIAMI BEACH, Fla., Dec. 28.—Among important engagements of especial interest in fashionable circles is that of Miss Ann Bright Hurt, lovely daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joel Hurt, of this city, formerly of Atlanta, Ga., to Hagood Clarke Jr., of Atlanta. The prominent young couple's marriage will be an interesting event of March, the plans for the nuptials to be announced later.

The attractive bride-elect is the younger daughter of her parents, her only sister being Mrs. Walter T. Colquitt Jr., of Miami Beach, formerly of Atlanta, who prior to her marriage was Miss Virginia Hurt.

Miss Hurt, the bride-to-be, is a member of distinguished families on both her maternal and paternal sides. Her mother is the former Miss Virginia Lipscomb, daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Rutherford Lipscomb, of Atlanta, and a descendant of the prominent Cobb and Rutherford families of Georgia.

On her paternal side Miss Hurt is the granddaughter of the late Joel Hurt and Mrs. Hurt, prominent factors in the civic and social upbuilding of Atlanta, the beautiful new park facing the Atlanta city auditorium having recently been dedicated and named for the late Mr. Hurt. Mrs. Hurt was formerly Miss Ann Bright Woodruff, of Columbus.

Miss Hurt attended school in Atlanta, where she is a frequent and sought-after visitor. For the past five years she has made her home in Miami Beach, where she is a valued member of the Miami Junior League.

The groom-elect is the elder son of Mr. and Mrs. Hagood Clarke Sr., of Atlanta, and his only brother is Harrison Clarke, also of that city.

Like his bride-to-be, Mr. Clarke is a member of well-known families, his mother being the former Miss Dorothy Harrison, daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Nathaniel Brodnax Harrison, of Savannah, Ga. He is descended from the Harrisons of Virginia and the Middletons of South Carolina, his maternal grandmother having been the former Miss Mary Middleton, of Charleston, S. C.

On his paternal side Mr. Clarke is the grandson of the late Mr. and Miss Virginia Frey, of Marietta.

Mrs. J. Porter Clarke, of Barnwell, S. C., and the great-grandson of the late Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Barrett

Miss Gwaltney is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Cleveland Gwaltney, of Macon, and Biddeford Pool, Maine, and her only brother is Eugene Cleveland Gwaltney Jr., a student in the graduate school of Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Boston.

Miss Gwaltney's mother is the former Miss Marion Johnson, of Rock Hill, S. C., daughter of Mrs. Jerome Bonaparte Johnson and the late Dr. Johnson, of that city. Her father is a son of the late Dr. and Mrs. William R. Gwaltney, of Hickory, N. C.

The bride-elect was educated at St. Mary's Junior College, Raleigh, N. C.; at Sweet Briar College in Virginia, and had a year of graduate work at Columbia University after she was graduated from

Miss Ingram, of California, To Wed Lt. Lawrence Hays

BREMERTON, Wash., Dec. 28. Enlisting widespread interest through navy circles on the east and west coasts, and in Georgia, is the announcement made today by Captain and Mrs. Jonas H. Ingram, U. S. N., of Long Beach, Cal., and Bremerton Navy Yards, Wash., of the engagement of their daughter, Miss Mary-Birch Ingram, to First Lieutenant Lawrence Coker Hays Jr., U. S. Marine Corps, son of Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence C. Hays, of Atlanta, Ga.

Miss Ingram is an attractive brunette, and following her graduation from Holton Arms School, in Washington, D. C., she attended Connecticut College. She later attended Scripps College in California. The bride-elect is a member of the Service Society and of the Junior League.

Lieutenant Hays graduated from Boys' High school in Atlanta, where he was active in many extra-curricular activities and was a member of the Alpha Sigma Phi

Miss Nannell Bagwell Weds Mr. Atkinson, of Savannah

Cordial social interests centers today in the announcement of the marriage of Miss Nannell Spinks Bagwell to David Scarlett Atkinson Jr., of Savannah. The ceremony was quietly solemnized in the chapel of the First Baptist church yesterday at 11 o'clock, in the presence of only the immediate families, with Dr. Ellis A. Fuller and Rev. James Lawrence, of Americus, officiating.

Palms and ferns formed a background for graceful arrangements of Easter lilies and lighted candles in branched candelabra. Music was presented by Mrs. Samuel A. Johnson and Miss Helen Shied. Following the ceremony, the couple left for a wedding trip, and on their return will make their home in Atlanta.

The bride is the lovely young daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wiley Nesbit Bagwell, prominent Atlanta citizens. Her mother is the former Miss Nell Spinks, of Dallas, Ga., and her maternal grandparents are Nancy Bone Spinks and the late Garrett Jefferson Spinks. On her paternal side, she is the granddaughter of the late Rev. and Mrs. George Larkin Bagwell, pioneer citizens of Gwinnett county.

The bride attended the Atlanta Girls' High school, and the University of Georgia, where she was graduated with a bachelor of science degree in home economics. She is a popular member of Chi Omega national sorority.

The bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. David Scarlett Atkinson, of Savannah. His mother is the former Miss Catherine Candler, daughter of Mrs. George L. Candler and the late Mr. George L. Candler, of Columbus and Savannah. His paternal grandparents are Mrs. Dean Dunwoody Atkinson, and the late Dr. Atkinson, of Brunswick, Ga. His sisters are Misses Anne Atkinson, Miss Lenora Atkinson and Mrs. William Manor, of Charlotte, North Carolina.

The bridegroom attended Savannah High school, and was graduated from the University of Georgia, receiving a bachelor of science degree in commerce. He is a member of Kappa Alpha fraternity, the Phi Delta Phi legal fraternity, and the Gridiron Club. He attended the Lumpkin Law school of the University of Georgia, and is now enrolled at Emory University Law school.

Miss Patricia Irwin Makes Formal Bow at Reception

Amid a setting reminiscent of the ornate days of the French King, Louis XIV, Miss Patricia Leone Irwin, lovely daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. Harvey Irwin, made her formal debut to Atlanta society yesterday afternoon at a reception given by her parents at the Capital City Club.

Glittering gold draperies and plastic rococo work transformed the club's salon into a dramatic setting to carry out a color motif of gold and white which was in effective contrast to the purple grapes and green leaves used as the base arrangements for the large silver bowls of eggnog.

Miss Irwin and her parents received standing before the handsome fireplace in the salon, which was draped with soft gold material extending from the high ceiling to the floor. The mantel was adorned with plastic rococo work framed by gold cloth, and candles in graduated sizes. On either side of the mantel were two gold frames posed on artist easels upon which were pinned the numerous clusters and bouquets of flowers sent the charming debutante by her friends. The floral tributes were placed against a background of white taffeta which further carried out the gold and white color motif. Flanking either side of the background were marble pedestals topped with flowers. At the entrance to the salon tall lighted columns topped with rubrum lilies further added to the regal motif.

On the baby grand piano, where Graham Jackson played, was a huge bouquet of yellow roses sent to Miss Irwin by friends in Chicago. The eggnog tables were covered in gold cloth finished in rococo design around the edge.

Miss Irwin's distinctive beauty was enhanced by her avocado green velvet gown which was designed to accentuate her slender graceful figure. The dress featured an off-the-shoulder design and tight sleeves. The tight bodice extended to the fashionable low hip-line and the full skirt was floor length. Miss Irwin carried a bouquet of rubrum lilies.

Mrs. Irwin, the hostess, was a handsome figure in her afternoon model of purple velvet made floor length, the bodice being trimmed in gold embroidery. Her flowers were a cluster of green orchids.

Among special visitors attending the affair were Miss Bette Ryder, of Washington, D. C., and Miss Ellen Moore, of Winston-Salem, N. C. The duo of belles are classmates of Miss Irwin at King-Smith school in Washington, D. C. Miss Irwin arrived here early in the month to spend the holidays with her parents and to make her formal bow. She will resume her studies in the national capital early in the new year.

Assisting in entertaining were Misses Mary Jo Brownlee, Frances Peace, Anne Harris and Mrs. William Mason. Several hundred members of society called between 5 and 7 o'clock.

Later in the evening Miss Irwin was honored by Mr. and Mrs. William Mason, who entertained at a dinner party at the Piedmont Driving Club.

White roses and lilies formed the center piece on the table, and place cards featured dancing girls. Covers were placed for Misses Irwin, Bette Ryder, of Washington, D. C.; Ellen Moore, of Winston-Salem, N. C.; Frances Peace, Anne Harris, Elizabeth Groves, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Chambers, Mr. and Mrs. Strother Fleming Jr., Walter James, Robert Alston, Louis de Givie, Dan Franklin, Pat Dinkins Jr., and Irving Gresham Jr.

This evening Mr. and Mrs. James Oliver will honor Miss Irwin at a dinner party at their home on Parkside drive.

Morning Ceremony Unites Miss Garland, Mr. Johnson

The historic old Rock Springs Presbyterian church formed the setting yesterday morning for the marriage of Miss Dorothy Cecile Garland, daughter of Mrs. Newton Eben Garland, and Daniel William Johnson, son of Mrs. Elsie Johnson, the ceremony being performed in the presence of a limited number of friends and members of the two families.

Rev. H. E. Russell, the pastor, officiated at 11:30 o'clock and prior to and during the ceremony a musical program was presented on the organ by Roy Liddell.

Rich greenery consisting of palms and ferns banked each side of the chancel and centering the marble altar was a large arrangement of white flowers. Flanking either side of the arrangement were four-branched candelabra holding white tapers.

Ushers were William C. Lee Jr., Ernest A. Nealy, Allen A. Alexander and Hugh Bowden, and the groomsmen were Roy Kinne and Daniel Matthews, cousin of the groom.

Mrs. Charles B. Johnson, of Chicago, was matron of honor, and Miss Jean Harris Johnson, sister of the groom, was the bridesmaid. They were gowned alike in becoming models of rose beige crepe made street length. The dresses featured a straight yoke in the front offset by handsome gold pins, which were gifts of the bride. Their hats were original models of blue felt, made with off-the-face brims. They carried an arm spray of talisman roses.

Little Mary Lou Grabbe was the junior bridesmaid and wore a model similar to the other attendants. She carried an old-fashioned bouquet of pink and blue flowers bordered in lace.

Entering with Robert Thrower, by whom she was given in marriage, the bride was met at the altar by the groom and his brother, Charles Wade Johnson, who was the best man. Her blond loveliness was offset by her original costume suit of Gaillard dusty blue wool featuring a straight jacket and a flared front, while the tight-fitting jacket was of the same color and material. Silver buttons and a silver lapel pin were attractive ornaments. She carried a satin prayerbook adorned with a shower of orchids. The prayerbook was loaned the bride by Mrs. John Grabbe.

Mrs. Garland, the bride's mother, was handsomely gowned in a model of pale aqua crepe with a felt hat to match and her flowers were gardenias. Mrs. Johnson, mother of the groom, was lovely in her model of black faille in a French design and her hat matched. Her flowers were gardenias.

After the ceremony the bridal couple left for a motor trip to north Georgia and Tennessee. The bride traveled in her wedding costume. The couple will reside in Atlanta for two months, before going to Camp Blanding, Fla., where Mr. Johnson will enter active service as a first lieutenant in the Army.

Out-of-town guests were Mr. and Mrs. C. N. Pike, Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Bailey and Mrs. J. S. Bailey, all of LaGrange, Ga.; Mr. and Mrs. Charles B. Johnson, of Chicago, Ill.; Miss Catherine Ortmeyer, of Tampa, Fla., and Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Yates Austin, of Scarsdale, N. Y.

Miss Gregory Weds William L. Slater

At an impressive ceremony taking place on December 24, Miss Betty Louise Gregory became the bride of William L. Slater at the Highland Avenue Associate Reformed Presbyterian church at 8 o'clock.

The double ring ceremony was performed by Rev. Dr. S. A. Tinkler, pastor of the church. Preceding the ceremony Mrs. R. O. Harris, organist, presented a musical program.

The attendants were Miss Aileen Brown, of Conyers, and Fred F. Wohlford. Miss Brown wore a costume suit of powder blue offset by beige accessories and a shoulder spray of tea roses. The bride wore a lovely three-piece brown suit trimmed with a fox collar. She wore matching accessories, and a shoulder spray of gardenias.

Mrs. Slater is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Willis R. Gregory, of Doraville, and her only sister is Miss Virginia Gregory. She attended Oglethorpe University, where she was a member of the Beta Phi Alpha Sorority, the Duchess Club, and the University Glee Club.

The groom is the son of L. L. Slater and the late Mrs. Slater, of Manhattan, Kan. He attended Kansas State College, where he received a degree in architectural arts. He is connected with the Libby-Owens-Ford Company.

Mr. and Mrs. Slater will reside at 146 Seventeenth street, N. E.

MRS. JOSEPH S. CUNNINGHAM.

Miss Phillips, of Greenville, Weds Joseph S. Cunningham

GREENVILLE, S. C., Dec. 27.—Of social interest throughout this section was the marriage of Miss Julia Cullen Phillips, daughter of Rev. and Mrs. Robert Theodore Phillips, of this city, and Joseph Stark Cunningham, of Nashville, and Chattanooga, Tenn., which took place here Tuesday at Christ Episcopal church.

Rev. Phillips, the bride's father, officiated at high noon in the presence of relatives and a limited number of friends. Rev. Phillips is rector of the historic Christ church, and after the ceremony, the bride and groom were taken to a Christmas luncheon at the rectory.

Miss Anne Phillips was maid of honor and only attendant for her sister, and Mr. Cunningham had as his best man his brother, Hubert Carter Cunningham, of Nashville, Tenn.

Mrs. Cunningham is a graduate of Randolph-Macon Woman's College, of Lynchburg, Va., where she was a member of Phi Mu sorority, and she has been a member of the Spinsters Club and the Junior Charities organization of this city. She has many friends throughout this section and also in Atlanta, where she has visited her aunts, Mrs. Milton Keeler and Mrs. Frank Morris. She is a representative of prominent southern families and has enjoyed wide popularity since early girlhood.

Mr. Cunningham is the son of Mrs. Roberta Lee Cartwright Cunningham and the late Oliver Cunningham, of Nashville, all members of well-known families. He was reared and educated in Nashville.

The groom is now connected with Fire Companies Adjustment Bureau in Chattanooga, where the young couple will reside.

Guthrie-Silvey Rites Announced

Miss Jewel Mills Guthrie, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Nim Jewel Guthrie, became the bride of Ira Ernest Silvey, son of Mr. and Mrs. Harvey D. Silvey, at a quiet ceremony taking place on December 24 at the home of the bride's parents on Colquitt avenue. Dr. Louis D. Newton officiated at 8 o'clock in the evening. Miss Allene Cheshire, pianist, presented a musical program. The improvised altar was banked with palms and ferns before which were placed cathedral candelabra holding burning white tapers and urns containing white narcissi and gladioli.

Mrs. J. B. Rainwater, the bride's mother of honor and only attendant, was stylishly gowned in a model of poudre-blue crepe offset by matching accessories and a shoulder cluster of pink rosebuds. The bride was given in marriage by her father. The groom was met at the altar by the groom and his best man, J. B. Rainwater. The lovely bride wore a chic model of soldier blue crepe, the bodice of which was trimmed with applied pastel flowers. She wore a dusty rose hat graced with a net at the altar by the groom and his best man, J. B. Rainwater. Miss Thompson Weds Mr. Greene At Church Rites

An interesting social event of the season was the marriage of Miss Dorothy Thompson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Jackson Thompson, to Clarence Leon Greene Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Leon Greene Sr., which was solemnized at the Church of the Incarnation in West End on December 24 at 8 o'clock. The pastor, the Rev. Theodore V. Morrison, performed the ceremony in the presence of a large assemblage of relatives and friends of the young couple.

A program of pre-nuptial music was presented by Mrs. Moele Horton Young, organist, and Miss Elizabeth Young, soloist. A profusion of palms and evergreens formed a background for the chancel and the altar vases held white chrysanthemums. Seven-branched candelabra holding gleaming white tapers completed the artistic altar decorations.

Groomsmen were Robert Charles Jester Jr. and William Bryan Herring Jr. Richard August Rauschenberg and William Riley Rauschenberg were ushers and Clarence Leon Greene Sr. attended as best man.

Mrs. Frank Lloyd Thompson, sister-in-law of the bride, was the mother of honor. She wore a gown of peach taffeta and carried a bouquet of talisman roses. The bridesmaids were Misses Ruth and Christine Thompson, sisters of the bride. Their gowns were fashioned like that worn by the matron of honor and were of powder blue taffeta with shirred basque bodices, squared necklines, bolero jackets and very full skirts. To the strains of Mendelssohn's wedding procession the bride entered with her father, by whom she was given in marriage. They were met at the altar by the groom and his father, his best man, and the bride's mother. The bride wore a gown of white satin made with fitted bodice, sweetheart neckline, leg-of-mutton sleeves and very full skirt. Her bridal illusion veil was held by a coronet of orange blossoms. She carried a bouquet of bridal roses showered with lilies of the valley.

The bride's mother wore a gown of baby blue chiffon with hat to match. Her corsage was of yellow roses. The mother of the bridegroom was becomingly gowned in aqua marine chiffon and wore a corsage of pink roses.

After the first of the year the couple will temporarily reside at 208 Fourteenth street, N. E.

Woodman Group Gives Yule Party

Mary E. La Rocca Grove of the Supreme Forest Woodmen Circle and East Point Camp No. 702, Woodmen of the World, entertained at their annual Christmas party recently in the Masonic hall on East Point street.

A beautifully decorated Christmas tree placed on the altar in the center of the hall was the principal decoration. Green foliage and red berries were massed on the altar to form a lovely effect.

A musical program was presented by Mrs. Mary Barksdale, pianist for La Rocca Grove, in which a large number of juniors of the forest participated.

Miss Ruth Sewell was steel guitar accompanist and Dorothy Barfield was the soloist. Harold Sprayberry gave a Christmas reading, and little Marian McDonald, aged three and one-half years, sang "God Bless America." Children's games were played and carols sung.

Mrs. Jeannie Brown introduced a contest for the grownups, in which Mrs. Montine Green won the prize.

The committee on arrangements included Mrs. Mary Barksdale, Mrs. Jeannie Brown, Mrs. Daisy Moultrie, M. M. Brown, J. R. Banks and W. H. Byars.

Refreshments were served.

Mrs. Dennett Weds Henry W. Burwell At St. Philip's

Mr. and Mrs. William G. Nichols announce the marriage of their daughter, Mrs. Abby Nichols Dennett, to Henry Warren Burwell, which took place on Friday at St. Philip's Cathedral.

Dean Raimundo de Ovies officiated at 2 o'clock in the presence of the two families.

Miss Mary Nichols was maid of honor and was gowned in a model of plum-colored crepe with black accessories and her flowers were gardenias. The groom's brother, Clyde Burwell, of Spartanburg, S. C., was the best man.

The bride was gowned in blue crepe with matching accessories, and her flowers were orchids.

After the ceremony, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Henry Lowndes entertained at an informal reception at their home on Blue Ridge avenue for the couple. The guests were limited to the families and friends.

The bridal couple left during the evening for a trip to Mexico and when they return in three weeks they will reside on Virginia avenue.

Among out-of-town guests here for the wedding were Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Burwell and Mr. and Mrs. Clyde Burwell, of Spartanburg, S. C., brothers of the groom; G. E. Burwell, of Miami, father of the groom; Mr. and Mrs. William Howell, brother and sister of the groom; Mr. and Mrs. Edward Shaffer, of Charlottesville, and W. H. G. Wright, of Lowell, Mass., uncle of the bride.

Miss Downing Weds Mr. Fetter

Miss Charlotte Frances Downing, daughter of Frank B. Downing, became the bride of William George Fetter, of Indianapolis, Ind., son of Mr. and Mrs. Sam Fetter of Davenport, Iowa, Thursday afternoon in the rectory of St. Anthony's Catholic church.

Father Nicholas Quinlan, officiated at 4 o'clock in the presence of a limited number of relatives and friends.

Miss Mary Downing, sister of the bride, was the maid of honor and only attendant and she wore a lightweight powder blue wedding dress made on tailored lines and accented by navy accessories. Her small navy hat was a bonnet type and she wore a corsage of rosebuds and valley lilies.

The bride was given in marriage by her father and at the altar they were met by the groom and his best man, Paul Downing, brother of the bride. The bride was gowned in a stunning costume suit, made two-piece, of moss green wool. The dress was made on tailored lines with a high neckline and short sleeves and the full-length coat, matching, was trimmed with hem-length rows of cross fox fur. She wore a small brown hat, and her accessories were of brown. She wore orchids. The young couple left for a motor trip to Indianapolis, Ind., where they will reside.

Miss Dame Weds Ben Forkner Jr.

FORT PIERCE, Fla., Dec. 27.—The marriage of Miss Olive Dame, daughter of Judge and Mrs. Fleming C. Dame, to Ben Sanders Forkner Jr., of Avondale Estates in Atlanta, took place at the First Baptist church, Dr. G. H. Moore, the pastor, performed the ceremony in the presence of relatives and friends of the families. The musical program was rendered by Mrs. J. W. Halbe, of Fort Pierce, and Mrs. T. N. West, of Palm Beach.

Thomas Forkner, of Avondale Estates, brother of the groom, was best man, and the ushers included Charles Dame, brother of the bride, and Ernest Sheffield.

Miss Catherine Dame, only sister of the bride, was maid of honor, and wore a becoming gown of powder blue net.

The lovely bride was given in marriage by her father, Judge Dame. Her wedding gown was made of white tulle taffeta, featuring a sweetheart neckline, embroidered with seed pearls, long leg of mutton sleeves pointed over the hand, and a pointed basque, with tiny covered buttons extending down the back.

The full skirt had a built-in train and a full tulle veil was made finger-tip length and was fastened to her hair with a halo of orange blossoms. She wore a single strand of pearls, a wedding present from the groom, and she carried a bouquet of white orchids and valley lilies.

Mr. and Mrs. Dame were hosts at a wedding reception held on the lawn of their home in Fort Pierce. Mr. Forkner and his bride left for their wedding trip to New Orleans, La. The bride traveled in a suit of coral blue wool, fashioned in redingote style, with a dress of silk print in the same shade of blue, combined with navy and white. Her accessories were of navy blue and her corsage was of white orchids.

After January 5, Mr. and Mrs. Forkner will reside at 122 Forkner drive in Decatur.

Birthday Party for Marilyn Grainger

Mrs. Shute Grainger was hostess at a birthday party recently at her home at 90 Douglas street, honoring her young daughter, Marilyn, who was two years old.

Mrs. T. C. McGuire assisted the hostess in entertaining.

CARTERSVILLE, Ga., Dec. 28. Mr. and Mrs. Paul Padgett, of Cartersville, announce the recent marriage of their daughter, Miss Thelma Elizabeth Padgett, to Marvin Earnest Smith. The marriage was solemnized at the home of Rev. J. W. Dooley, in Chatsworth. The bride wore a costume of soldier blue with a silver fox jacket with black accessories. Mrs. Smith, a graduate of Cartersville High school, studied at Georgia State College for Women and the University of Georgia. She is a teacher in the schools at Acworth. The bride's mother is the former Mary Nelle Cain, daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Joe F. Cain. Her father is the son of Mrs. Lola Foster Padgett and the late John L. Padgett, and Mrs. John Williams, of Acworth. Her only brother is Paul Padgett Jr., of Cartersville.

The groom attended Berry schools and holds a position with the Goodyear Clearwater Mills. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Earnest W. Smith. He is a brother of Miss Mildred and Ellen Smith, Mrs. Glover Davis and George Smith, of Rock Hill, S. C. His mother is the former Miss Bell Cook, daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Ben Hill Cook, of Bartow county.

Miss Marie Margaret Edmondson, whose betrothal to Peter Thomson, of Atlanta, formerly of New York, is announced today. Miss Edmondson is the attractive young daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Valentine Edmondson.

Miss Margaret Edmondson Is Bride of Walter Noonan

LAGRANGE, Ga., Dec. 28.—The wedding of Miss Margaret Edmondson, of LaGrange, and Walter Noonan, of Detroit, Mich., and Dallas, Texas, took place today at 12 o'clock in the Ida Cason Callaway Memorial chapel of the First Baptist church. Dr. Willis E. Howard, pastor, performed the marriage service.

The chancel and altar were effectively decorated with wood-wardia ferns, alabaster urns of calla lilies, and garlands of fern. White tapers burned in cathedral candelabra. A musical program was presented by Miss Elizabeth Gilbert, vocalist, of LaGrange College, and Mrs. E. C. Herman, organist, of LaGrange.

Mr. Noonan's best man was Merritt D. Hill, of Detroit, and ushers were Carl W. Edmondson, of LaGrange, brother of the bride; Seth B. Mellen, of Atlanta; Marion Roberts and Curtis Glass, both of LaGrange.

Joann Finn, small daughter of Mrs. J. R. Finn, of LaGrange, was flower girl. She was dressed in blue velvet with matching bonnet and carried a colonial bouquet of sweet peas.

Miss Marian Hollis Edmondson, of LaGrange, sister of the bride, was maid of honor. She wore a dress of white velvet, featuring a collar of white duchesse lace. Her hat was of white velvet, and she chose matching accessories. Yellow roses and sweet peas were her flowers.

The bride was given in marriage by her brother, Joseph Henry Edmondson, of LaGrange. She was lovely in a dress of soldier blue crepe, tucked with silver thread and fashioned with a high neckline. With this she wore a silver fox jacket and a close-fitting blue hat of French felt trimmed with coque feather pompons. A matching veil fell to her shoulders, and her accessories were black suede. Her flowers were a purse spray of Parma violets showered with valley lilies.

Following the ceremony, Misses Mabel and Marian Edmondson entertained at a wedding breakfast at their home. Miss Mabel Edmondson received the guests wearing black velvet, stitched with gold, with accessories of black. Her flowers were Talisman roses.

The bride's book was kept by Mrs. Wesley Bagby, of Charlotte, N. C., and Miss Rachel Beard, of LaGrange.

The couple left for a wedding trip to New Orleans, La., after which they will go for residence to Dallas, Texas, where Mrs. Noonan has been employed as a representative of United Motors Service. For traveling, the bride chose a Schiaparelli ensemble of wine wool with a long, fitted coat of wine and river-blue herringbone tweed. Her hat was a French model of wine felt, with a short veil. Her costume was completed by white accessories and a nosegay of Parma violets.

ALCOHOLISM SUCCESSFULLY TREATED

Although seemingly unbelievable, the most rigid investigation will verify this claim. The sole purpose of this treatment is to remove the alcoholic accumulation from the glands in the body, after which a positive aversion is created. When this has been accomplished no will-power is necessary to fight a condition that no longer exists. The excessive drinker is the victim of a condition that he himself created, unknowingly. The accumulation of alcohol in the body creates a powerful narcotic influence and when this condition has been reached it has to be maintained, even against the will of those afflicted with this disease.

This treatment, requiring from three to five days, accomplishes the following results: Removes all craving for drink; builds up a positive aversion to alcohol; causes a healthy glandular stimulation; restores the mind to normal; gives a new lease on life.

Halifax Is Declared No Appeaser by Pertinax

Halifax and Queen Mother Mary.

By PERTINAX.

For the North American Newspaper Alliance.

NEW YORK, Dec. 28.—Lord Halifax is in some danger of being misunderstood in this country. He is commonly believed here to have been Neville Chamberlain's closest associate in the enforcement of the so-called policy of "appeasement." To see him in that light is to fail to appraise his sound judgment, his strength of character and even perhaps the spirit which will lead him in the discharge of his ambassadorial task.

Strictly speaking, Lord Halifax never belonged to the political school which went under the name of Munich. He accepted, in February, 1938, to become Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, in place of Anthony Eden when the latter clashed with the Prime Minister over the proper way to handle Fascist Italy, but, as early as the following month of May, he already had been won to the policy of resistance which the highest officials of the foreign office never ceased to support.

From that time on, he did whatever he could to convince the cabinet that there was no alternative open to Great Britain except stand firm in defense of international law. Considerations of loyalty to his chief, it is true, powerfully weighed on his mind and caused him to swerve too far from his own path. Nevertheless, I had it from one of his colleagues that, in the cabinet council held on September 21, 1938, two days after the Godesberg meeting, when Mr. Chamberlain coldly proposed that Germany's ultimatum should be complied with, the foreign secretary rose against him and compelled him to revise his views. Up to that day, both disagreed in private conversation, but had never made known to the other ministers how much they differed in outlook.

After Mr. Chamberlain had finally given up to Germany's forcible demands at Munich, the foreign secretary, who had been left at home, never shared in the illusions which the great man himself spread from the airfield: "I bring you peace for our lifetime." He took that so-called settlement for what it really amounted to: a mere respite. Privately, he never concealed what he thought.

Czecho-Slovakia's independence was finally annihilated on March 15, 1939, and within a few days Mr. Chamberlain announced to the world in a speech delivered at Birmingham that "appeasement" had gone forever, that assistance would be lent to any nation determined to fight the German claim for hegemony. It is not generally known that, until the eleventh hour, the Prime Minister was reluctant to take that step. But for Lord Halifax, the Birmingham speech would have struck indeed a milder note.

Last year Edouard Daladier, the French president of the council, in a talk with Winston Churchill, referring to past negotiations, mentioned the "Chamberlain-Halifax policy." Mr. Churchill swiftly retorted: "You are thoroughly mistaken. Halifax and myself, we have seen eye to eye about the position in Europe for a long while."

Perhaps the most striking feature of his personality is a deep religious feeling. His father, who died at nearly the age of 100, was the undisputed leader of the High-churchmen currently described as Anglo-Catholics, closely connected with Cardinal Mercier, the Belgian primate, who left him his pastoral ring as a legacy and in his letters often referred to "Edward,"—the present ambassador of the Court of St. James to the United States.

Lord Halifax is naturally inclined to look at all political developments "sub specie aeternitatis." (Under the angle of eternity.) Until three years ago, he was wont to interpret the Nazi revolution in the terms of a recovery of German power with which one had better put up. In that spirit he went to Berchtesgaden in November, 1937, and was closeted a whole day with the Fuehrer. He was then Lord Privy Seal and, dealing with continental affairs, he would lift his eyes to heaven as though to keep clear from all vulgar prejudices. Thus was he described by a very highly placed French official whose duty was to often visit him. But at the end of 1938, that same official added these words: "I can tell you that, now, he sharply looks around him when he has to discuss how we must treat Germany." In brief, Hitler has become for Halifax a satanic being and, of all men, he would be the last to come to terms with Lucifer.

Camacho Wins First Mexican Senate Test

MEXICO CITY, Dec. 28.—(AP)—President Manuel Avila Camacho won his first test of strength in the senate today when it approved three additional supreme court nominations after they were reported to have been rejected in caucus yesterday. After today's session the senate explained it merely had deferred action on the three yesterday, although all newspapers here said it had turned them down on the grounds that they were reactionary and had asked for new nominations.

De Gaulle Urges France To Re-enter the War

'Doing a Laval,' Paris Reports White Is Told Laval Will Be By LaGuardia Liaison Agent

Mayor Attacks Recent Stand of His 'Dear and Good Friend.'

NEW YORK, Dec. 28.—(UP)—Mayor F. H. LaGuardia disclosed tonight that he had accused his "dear and good friend" William Allen White, chairman of the Committee to Defend America by Aiding the Allies, of "doing a typical Laval."

The mayor made public a letter to White which referred to the Kansas editor's "The Yanks Are Not Coming" statement published in the Scripps-Howard newspapers and likened it to the conduct of Pierre Laval, anti-British French politician.

LaGuardia's letter added fuel to the fire of dissension already burning within the White committee as a result of White's statement of policy. The mayor proposed that the committee divide and added:

"You could continue as chairman of the 'Committee to Defend America by Aiding the Allies with Words' and the rest of us would join a 'Committee to Defend America by Aiding the Allies with Deeds.'"

Earlier some officials of the committee had indicated they would repudiate White's statement, which he had made in response to queries by Roy W. Howard.

The executive committee, after a meeting yesterday, said it would stand behind the statement of policy made last November and favored removal of "restrictive statutes which hamper this nation in its freedom of action which it would co-operate with nations defending themselves from attack." The executive committee called a meeting for Monday.

White in his statement had said the organization opposed repeal of the Johnson and Neutrality acts. Meanwhile, Dr. Frank Kingdon and Herbert Bayard Swope, members of the committee's national policy board, issued a statement in the name of the New York chapter supporting President Roosevelt's proposal to lend or lease supplies to Britain and declaring they were "militarily opposed" to "Nazi agents and appeasers of every stripe."

Kingdon and Swope said the Philadelphia and Boston chapters had endorsed their statement.

ATLANTA INDORSSES WHITE STATEMENT
Chester B. Blakeman Atlanta chairman of the Committee to Defend America by Aiding the Allies, said last night that he and the Atlanta chapter stand wholeheartedly behind William Allen White and the executive committee in the policy they have expressed.

"I am sure White and the executive committee will do everything possible to help Britain," he said.

He added he thought he expressed the sentiment of the local group as a whole in backing up White's statement of policy.

Work Started On $1,000,000 Ford Foundry

Magnesium Alloy Plant Expected To Break Plane Bottleneck.

DETROIT, Dec. 28.—(UP)—The Ford Motor Company has started construction on a $1,000,000 magnesium foundry which is expected to break one of the principal bottlenecks in United States war plane production, it was learned in the aircraft program and other engine plants urgently needing the metal for defense production.

It was learned that the National Defense Advisory Commission had requested Ford to build the plant because present production of the alloy, half as light as aluminum and nearly as strong as cast iron, was far below requirements in the aircraft program and other engine plants urgently needing the metal for defense production.

"Production of castings is scheduled to start early in March, approximately a month before Ford's $21,000,000 plant for Pratt & Whitney "Double Wasp" plane motor manufacture is completed, a company spokesman said.

Aluminum Supply Is Declared Ample

WASHINGTON, Dec. 28.—(AP)—Assurances that supplies of aluminum were ample for the defense program were given today by Edward R. Stettinius Jr., defense commissioner in charge of industrial materials.

In a report on existing and prospective supplies of the metal, Stettinius asserted that this week's curtailment of operations by one aircraft plant was "unnecessary." Identifying the plant as that of the Northrop Aircraft Corporation at Hawthorne, Cal., he said the concern subsequently had informed the defense commission that shipments scheduled by the Aluminum Company of America would permit maintenance of 10-hour shifts with no interruption of schedules.

Hitler Wants Him as Go-Between With Vichy Government.

VICHY, France, Dec. 28.—(UP)—Adolf Hitler intends to re-establish Pierre Laval as chief liaison agent between the German and French governments, it was reported from Paris tonight as Marshal Petain's council of ministers debated vital decisions.

The council adjourned at 8 o'clock after a two and one-half hour session dealing with "important matters" but its decision was delayed until a later meeting, either Monday or Tuesday.

Petain summoned the council to hear Admiral Francois Darlan, navy minister and No. 2 man of the Petain regime, report on his Christmas conference with an unidentified "very high personality" in Nazi occupied France.

The French press in Paris and the occupied zone suggested that Laval will be charged with a "broad mission" as liaison agent between the French and German governments which may be a final solution of his overthrow giving satisfaction to the Hitler and the German government.

Laval and one of his closest collaborators, it was learned, conferred in Paris Thursday afternoon with Count Fernand de Brinon, the Vichy government's chief delegate to the German authorities in Paris.

Aid to Britain At Any Cost Is Urged by Agar

'You Cannot Appease a Revolution,' Kentucky Editor Asserts.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Dec. 28.—(AP)—Immediate and increased aid for Great Britain—whatever the cost in "work or wealth or hardship"—was urged tonight by Herbert Agar, editor of the Courier-Journal and a member of the William Allen White Committee to Defend America by Aiding the Allies, as the surest means of preserving the American way of life.

He spoke on the People's Forum, broadcast nationally by the Columbia Broadcasting System. "You cannot appease a revolution," Agar said. "The best we can hope for if we let Britain fall—if we let the revolution take the whole earth except our one continent—is gloomy years of increasing militarism, increasing economic pressure from the slave-world without."

"I ask every person who is listening tonight to send word at once to the President that he or she approves the request for light, and leadership and victory," he added.

'FREELY GIVEN' HELP ASKED
NEW YORK, Dec. 28.—(AP)—The Inter-Faith Committee for Aid to the Democracies, composed of prominent Catholic, Jewish and Protestant clergymen and laymen, urged today that planes, ships, munitions and food "be freely given or lent" by the United States to Great Britain.

BRANCH OF WHITE GROUP URGES AID
ROCHESTER, N. Y., Dec. 28.—(AP)—Twenty-three members of the Rochester Committee to Defend America by Aiding the Allies, a branch of the national group headed by William Allen White, today telegraphed President Roosevelt to urge "immediate aid to Great Britain in any and every form you feel is possible."

Among signers of the telegram was Harper Sibley, former president of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States.

MORE LEADERS ASK 'ALL POSSIBLE AID'
NEWARK, N. J., Dec. 28.—(AP)—Nineteen business and professional men who took military training at Plattsburg, N. Y., last July, tonight sent President Roosevelt a telegram endorsing a letter signed by more than 150 prominent Americans who urged the President to give all possible aid to Great Britain.

Newbold Morris, president of the New York City Council, is chairman of the group.

Army, Navy Rush 17 Hawaiian Bases

WASHINGTON, Dec. 28.—(UP)—The Army and Navy are rushing work on 17 air bases in the Hawaiian area which will constitute an impenetrable barrier to any hostile approach from the Far East, Hawaiian Delegate Samuel W. King said tonight.

King, who as congressional representative from Hawaii is a member of both the House Naval Affairs and Military Affairs Committees, said defense work in the Hawaiian sector is proceeding at an unprecedented pace. He has just returned from a visit to the Pacific "Gibraltar."

The 17 air bases are distributed among the Hawaiian island group proper, and on adjacent islands strung across the Pacific as far west as the 200th Meridian, King disclosed.

Group Urges F.D.R. To Keep U. S. Defenses

Body Opposes Lending or Giving Away Nation's Protection.

CEDAR RAPIDS, Ia., Dec. 28.—(AP)—The No Foreign War Committee sent to President Roosevelt tonight a telegram, signed by 3,500 "common people," urging him "not to lend or give away the defenses of the nation."

The telegram described the signers as "thousands of the common people who furnish the cannon fodder and the food for war, who fight and die in wars forced on them by their governments, and who, in the last analysis, must pay for those wars."

They asked the President in his radio broadcast Sunday night "to tell them that the assurances you gave in the recent Presidential campaign will be kept, to the letter." The telegram added:

"Trusting that you are correctly informed when you repeatedly tell them that their own country's defenses are dangerously inadequate and that all haste must be made in a furious effort to strengthen those defenses against some aggressor who may have designs upon this hemisphere, the common people of the great middle west and many states outside that solidly American area are fearful when they see so much of their defense equipment and material shipped overseas."

Verne Marshall, editor of the Cedar Rapids Gazette and chairman of the committee, said persons from 20 states had authorized use of their signatures.

WOOD ASKS REITERATION OF PEACE PLEDGE
CHICAGO, Dec. 28.—(UP)—General Robert E. Wood, national chairman of the America First Committee, tonight sent a telegram to the White House expressing confidence that in his Sunday night radio talk to the nation, President Roosevelt would reiterate "your pre-election statements that under no conditions will we involve our nation in war abroad."

STUDENT UNION AIDES HITS DEFENSE POLICIES
NEW YORK, Dec. 28.—(AP)—Criticism of New Deal national defense policies, the National Defense Commission and the Committee to Defend America by Aiding the Allies marked today's session of the American Student Union national convention.

Roy Lancaster, representative of the youth division of labor's non-partisan league of the CIO, said that the Defense Commission was "anti-labor and reactionary," and that the New Deal was trying to shove labor's progressive program in favor of "war measures" to aid Great Britain and eventually involve the United States in the war.

He called for a third party and unity within the ranks of labor—"not with warmongers and those who would wreck the labor movement."

London Escapes Nazi Night Raid

LONDON, Dec. 28.—(AP)—While no Nazi raiders had appeared on London at a late hour tonight, a southwest town suffered one of its heaviest assaults of the war. Two hospitals were hit, many stores and homes destroyed, but the British reports said the number of casualties was believed "comparatively small."

During the day "some damage" was caused at Southampton by a lone German raider.

U. S. Has 65,000 Certified Pilots

WASHINGTON, Dec. 28.—(UP)—The number of certified pilots in the United States increased approximately 100 per cent during 1940, while the number of aircraft for them to fly increased 30 per cent, the Civil Aeronautics Administration said tonight.

By the end of the year, approximately 65,000 young Americans will hold pilot's licenses, as compared with 31,264 on January 1, 1940. More than 17,000 airplanes will be in service, there were 12,820 a year ago.

More than 25,000 of the new pilots were trained by the civilian pilot training program. An additional 15,000 youths are completing their preliminary courses.

Dates Are Set For Inducting 393 Draftees

Call Will Dip Into Group That Hasn't Volunteered.

Induction dates in January for 393 draftees from Fulton and DeKalb county local boards were announced yesterday by state selective service headquarters. The first men will be taken January 7, the others staggered after that date.

The call is the second to be made in this state, and the first one which actually will dip into the order lists of draft registrants for military training.

Officials said that "a few boys" in this section would be able to meet their quotas with volunteers. But others do not have enough voluntary inductees applicants to fill the Army demand, and will have to resort to actual drafting.

There are 316 white registrants in the Fulton and DeKalb call, and they will be inducted at Fort McPherson. An exception is Fulton Boards 1 and 2 which will send their January draftees to Fort Benning. All Negroes will go to Fort Benning.

The January call will take a larger proportion of white registrants than usual. However, the February call in this state will consist almost entirely of Negroes, bringing the proportion up to parity.

Local boards, their quotas and the induction date in January follow:

DeKalb No. 1-11 whites, January 9; five Negroes, January 20.
Fulton No. 2-11 whites, January 9; five Negroes, January 20.
Fulton No. 3-17 whites, January 9; five Negroes, January 20.
Fulton No. 4-14 whites, January 9; five Negroes, January 20.
Fulton No. 5-21 whites, January 9; seven Negroes, January 20.
Fulton No. 6-23 whites, January 9; four Negroes, January 20.
Fulton No. 7-18 whites, January 9; four Negroes, January 20.
Fulton No. 8-13 whites, January 9; three Negroes, January 20.
Fulton No. 9-18 whites, January 22; four Negroes, January 22.
Fulton No. 10-14 whites, January 22; four Negroes, January 22.
Fulton No. 11-15 whites, January 22; four Negroes, January 22.
Fulton No. 12-15 whites, January 22; four Negroes, January 22.
Fulton No. 13-16 whites, January 22; four Negroes, January 22.
Fulton No. 14-15 whites, January 22; four Negroes, January 22.
Fulton No. 15-15 whites, January 22; four Negroes, January 22.
Fulton No. 16-15 whites, January 22; four Negroes, January 22.
Fulton No. 17-15 whites, January 22; four Negroes, January 22.

Vichy Regime Ready To Flee, London Hears

Hitler Reported To Have Broken Relations With Petain.

LONDON, Dec. 28.—(UP)—Reports that the French government at Vichy is considering renewing the war against Germany tonight brought a radio appeal by General Charles de Gaulle, leader of the "Free French" forces, urging the French people to rise up in arms against the German conquerors.

London Sunday newspapers reported, without confirmation, that Adolf Hitler has broken off all negotiations with the French government at Vichy, bringing to a head a major crisis.

The Vichy regime was reported here to have arranged to flee with the government and its immobilized fleet of nearly 100 warships to North Africa to resume the war if Germany should attempt to occupy all France or seize the fleet.

De Gaulle appealed to all French leaders "whatever may have been their mistakes" to renew the war against Hitlerism and promised them the full support of Free French forces fighting now at Britain's side.

Many listeners believed, in view of reports of an impending crisis at Vichy, that De Gaulle was directing his remarks to 84-year-old Marshal Petain, chief of the French state, among others.

His radio appeal was timed to coincide with reports that the Vichy government is wavering between collaboration with Hitler and a repudiation of the French-German armistice, throwing France back into the war in a fight for her Mediterranean and African empire.

(Reports circulated in Lisbon that French naval forces may be gathering in North Africa, according to the Associated Press.)

(Travelers from unoccupied France said they had been informed reliably that Petain had authorized some French naval officers to spend "vacations" in North Africa, and that several French naval units already have been dispatched there from Toulon.)

(Budapest informants said Petain had told the Nazis that if their terms for a final peace were unacceptable, he would cut North Africa loose, with General Maxime Weygand taking a large colonial army there over to de Gaulle's "Free French" forces and moving against Italian Libya in co-ordination with British action from Egypt.)

Follows Mystery Trip.
De Gaulle's broadcast followed the mysterious trip to German-held Paris over the weekend of Admiral Francois Darlan, navy minister and No. 2 man of the Vichy regime.

Darlan, who was said to have conferred with a "very high German personality," was believed here to have indicated to the Germans the limits of the Vichy government's collaboration.

There have been unconfirmed reports that planes are being held ready at Vichy to carry Petain and his followers to North Africa out of reach of the Germans in event there is a breakdown in the French-German talks.

Taking advantage of reported troubles between the French government at Vichy and the Germans, de Gaulle directed his appeal in particular to the French overseas empire.

1,000 French Slain.
De Gaulle said that his Free French followers have the right and duty to speak freely because "we have never recognized the law of the enemy."

"We have this right," he said, "because of the enemy soldiers killed and taken prisoners by our troops, because of the enemy ships sunk by our navy and because of the planes brought down by our airmen."

"We have this right because 1,000 of our troops, land soldiers, sailors and airmen, have died for France since the armistice."

This was the first official disclosure of Free French casualties since the collapse of France last spring.

The chief German demand reported in London to have brought French-German relations to the verge of a crisis was said to be Hitler's insistence that the French fleet be turned over to Germany in order that the Reich may go to Italy's aid.

The imminent arrival in Vichy of Admiral Wilhelm Leahy to take up his post as United States ambassador was said to have had a part in influencing the firm stand of Petain and Darlan.

The diplomatic correspondent of the Sunday Times said that Admiral Darlan attaches great importance to the part which he is to play by the United States in preserving French integrity.

Italians Decree Death For Hoarders of Food

STARS NEED A CAMERA CALM

Ginger Rogers Won Self-Confidence in "Kitty Foyle."

By SHEILAH GRAHAM, For North American Newspaper Alliance.

"GINGER has found herself," Lew Ayres said to me some months ago. I didn't quite know what he meant until I saw Miss Rogers as "Kitty Foyle." Her confidence in herself has reached the 100 per cent tide-mark. And this has given me an idea.

For years I've been trying to define the most important ingredient for film success. And now I think I have it. It's confidence, boys and girls. Not merely the confidence you exude in normal every-day life, but the ability to bring that confidence into your work before the camera.

I made a mistake recently when I said that Hedy Lamarr was improving as an actress. She is merely getting more confident. She is also acquiring more experience, which is the first cousin to confidence. I doubt whether Hedy will ever be a great actress. Her emotional makeup was not prepared for that. But I think she will be a star of magnitude. The directors of her future pictures handle her as cleverly as King Vidor did in "Comrade X."

Every time I went on the set, King—first making sure that the gorgeous brunette was within hearing distance—would say, "Wait until you see Hedy in this—she's great." Clark Gable helped in the good work. He sort of lifted her into her role on the wings of his own confidence and vitality. "Go in there, Lamarr—and kill 'em," he'd say before a difficult shot.

As I said at the beginning of this column, confidence in real life is not always the same thing before the camera. Desi Arnaz had so much confidence away from the camera, that everyone on the R. K. O. lot ecstaticized, "We have another Valentino—wait 'til you see him in 'Too Many Girls.'" I went, I saw, but I was not convinced. That super-belief in himself disappeared in the process of putting it on the screen.

Carole Landis is another who Ginger Rogers as the White-Collar Girl.

Some Film Stars Are Unnatural Before Camera.

is blessed with extreme confidence—when the camera is absent—but, for me anyway, it doesn't come through on the screen. Betty Field is the reverse. A conversation with the Betty of non-acting life is one of the more ordinary experiences. There's just no one there. Her personality is a blank facade. But give her something to act for the camera, and when she's any one of a dozen different exciting personalities.

Of course, Miss Field has had stage experience. But that counts less than one would expect for screen success. Take Nancy Kelly. She's prettier than the other girl, and, when she came to the movies, had as much stage work—perhaps more, to her credit. But her lack of confidence in the new medium was too apparent. Remember those lines of nervousness around her mouth? She's getting over her timidity now. All she needs is another chance in a good film.

But if Nancy feels badly about the non-consummation of her screen hopes, this might cheer her up. Stage stars of the caliber of Lynn Fontanne, Gertrude Lawrence and Tallulah Bankhead were flops as screen actresses. And Katharine Cornell is so non-confident about her chances in Hollywood she will not sign a contract here.

Helen Hayes was one of the very few top-ranking stage stars to equal her success on the screen. Usually, important stars of the stage drop down a peg into character players when they bring their talents to the screen. To name a few—Charles Coburn, Charles Winninger, Thomas Mitchell, Lynne Overman, Ernest Truex, Roland Young and Helen Broderick. Some of our big-shot movie stars had stage experience, but they never were as big on the stage as they are on the screen.

To go back to "Kitty Foyle"—and the "confidence" theme, Ginger Rogers has two leading men, Dennis Morgan and James Craig. When Morgan was given the more important role of "Wyn," I was told by Director Sam Wood that this picture would make him a grade A star.

UNCLE SAM Brightens UP THE CORNER IN BR'ER RABBIT'S HOME

By GEORGE C. STONEY.

IF the ghost of Uncle Remus were to come back to northeast Putnam county, where Joel Chandler Harris discovered him sixty-odd years ago, he might have a hard time recognizing the place.

There are still plenty of briar patches for Br'er Rabbit to hide in, right enough. But the cotton fields and the mansions of which Uncle Remus was a part are no more.

"Ole bad Boll Weevil, he come right after de big German Wah," Uncle Remus might tell of it, "and he got all de cotton." Bad ole Boll Weevil got it all in 1920, 1921, 1922...

So, most folks stopped planting cotton and moved to town. Erosion—something Uncle Remus didn't talk about—gullied and leached the land almost to worthlessness before briars and pine seedlings came to soothe its wounds. Br'er Rabbit's great-great-grandchildren had the whole plantation to themselves.

Five years ago a new bunch of farmers came to the Uncle Remus country. They have been turning briar patches into terraced pastures, spotting old cotton fields with red pimento peppers, and raising a strain of chickens so aristocratic Br'er Fox wouldn't have the gall to eat one if the strongly-wired poultry houses gave him the chance.

Yes, Uncle Remus would find a little cotton for his homesickness, but as 25-year-old Henry Grady West put it, "Cotton, it's nothing any more but hard work."

"I've kept records on my little patch," West was saying the other day as he pushed a torn straw hat back to a jaunty angle over his broad forehead. "My papers show it cost me $53.92 to put it in the ground. I'll not make that much back off it, hardly, not with me doing the picking myself." But Henry Grady West kept smiling.

"This is what I'm getting into," he pointed towards a handsome heifer yearling. "In another year she'll be fresh. I got two more like her. Right now I'm milking fifteen, and any one of them will bring me more money, year in and year out, than I could make on a cotton patch."

Farmer West is making a go of it. With 20 other homesteaders at Briar Patch, a Farm Security Administration project near Eatonton, and 50 homesteaders on near-by Piedmont Farms out from Monticello, he is proving that, despite erosion and the boll weevil, these old cotton plantations in Piedmont Georgia can produce a living. They can produce a living, that is, providing hard work and a new system of cropping are made a part of the bargain.

A dozen years after these Piedmont plantations had been all but abandoned, agricultural experts at the University of Georgia decided to experiment. They wanted to prove the practicability of dividing the plantations into family-sized farms and working them on a diversified cropping basis.

The federal government took over the financial responsibility and, with the planning and assistance of the University people, considerable areas in Putnam and Jasper counties were purchased. Heirs of Joel Chandler Harris sold the old home place for Briar Patch Farms, with the understanding that it bear this appropriate name.

Much of the land was found too much eroded for any attempt at restoration. This was planted to pine. The best land they divided into homesteads averaging 200 acres each, now managed by the Farm Security Administration.

Whenever possible old houses found on the land were remodeled and modernized. Henry Grady West lives with his white-moustached father and gentle, gray old mother in an ample farmhouse that must have watched the boys in gray march off to war. Its two broad chimneys, magnificently patterned of hand-made brick, have been repaired. Mrs. West and Henry Grady have finally hosed all the wild plum trees out of the front yard. A fine old walkway of boxwood is again bushing out handsomely under their care.

On most of the homestead units new houses had to be built. These are attractive two-room bungalows, complete with pumps, bath tubs, large barns, chicken houses, sanitary privies, fenced gardens, etc. The homesteads on Piedmont Farms have been electrified. Briar Patch houses are being wired.

Folks living at Piedmont and Briar Patch represent a cross section of rural Georgia. There are former share-croppers and men who once owned ten-horse farms. A few are almost illiterate. A few others have college training. There are childless couples and there are families with eight children. Heads of families range from 21 years of age up into the middle fifties.

About half these families came, originally, from Jasper and Putnam counties. Though all have farming backgrounds, several had moved to the cities during boom times to work as grocery men, mill hands, shoe salesmen.

on the Piedmont project, worked twenty years of his life as a shoe salesman. A meticulously trimmed moustache and slicked black hair, marks of his former profession, are still with him. But Wallace's hands are rough with callouses, and the sun and wind are leathering his thin face.

The World War which first took Mr. Wallace away from his father's farm left him with a constitution that finally proved unfit for the close air of cities. Poor health dogged his heels. In 1937 he, his wife, and their little daughter, decided they were going to move back to the country no matter what the hardships.

His father-in-law was working one of the Piedmont units, so Wallace applied to the Farm Security Administration for a place. He was refused. "Twenty years away from the plow doesn't fit a man for homesteading, not in this country," he was told.

Mr. Wallace said he'd show them! For two years he made crops with his father-in-law. He got his hands tough; he got his knees limbered to the truck farmer's squat; he learned about terracing and soil building. Last winter the Wallaces took a homestead for themselves.

Poultry rather than dairying is the main "side in" money crop for the Wallaces. In January they bought 300 baby chicks for the brooder.

"How many do you think we lost?" Mrs. Wallace beamed with pride. "How many—guess?"

We thought about last February's zero weather and ventured, "Fifty-odd?"

"We just lost two," she said triumphantly. "And those were ones somebody stepped on!"

"But we evermore stayed with those birds," her husband put in. "She'd be out there watching them all day while I was in the field, and I'd be out there two or three times every night to see if they were warm enough."

"Two or three times, nothing!" Mrs. Wallace corrected him. "When we were having that real cold spell you stayed out in that chicken house so much I thought you'd left me and married those things."

Half the homesteaders make a specialty of chickens. With the help of Farm Supervisor Harland Fetzer, a poultry expert, their purebred flocks are inspected, blood-tested, vaccinated—all but bathed and manicured. They get a carefully formulated diet.

In return for such care, a hatchery in near-by Macon gives the homesteaders 42 cents a dozen for all the eggs they can gather from October to March. Last year they sold between six and seven thousand broiler chickens on the Macon and Milledgeville markets. This fall each poultryman laid a cement foundation for a new brooder and nesting house to care for enlarged flocks.

Farmer Wallace, along with most other homesteaders at Piedmont, plants a couple of acres of pimento peppers for sale to a cannery in Milledgeville. One of his neighbors makes a specialty of snap beans. Several others are putting in beds of strawberries. The local quick-freezing plant will buy all they can produce. Homesteaders plant their few allotted acres of cotton, of course, but they know better than to depend on it.

IV. Despite mid-August's winds that all but pulled cotton stalks out of the ground, Homesteader Charles A. McCallister's patch this fall would have made that ghost of Uncle Remus grin from ear to ear.

"Hit it lucky?" we asked. "You might call it that," Mr. McCallister grinned back. "Then again you might say it's something else." In 1935 he made one bale of cotton on eight acres. This year he made five bales on nine acres.

The "something else" McCallister spoke of was soil-building practices. The land has been terraced. Cover crops have protected it in the winter and, turned under each spring, have enriched it. A proper system of crop rotation has helped balance its supply of plant foods. "You ought to see this place when we first come," Mr. McCallister answered an expression of admiration for the smoothness of his lawn and the attractive way shrubbery banked about his white cottage, set back of a big oak tree. "We started whacking out bushes right at the front steps. We had the whole place to do. There wasn't but two acres on the whole place clean enough to take plow." Now even the woodland on Mr. McCallister's place is clean, and green enough to pasture his small dairy herd.

Before coming to Piedmont Farms, 57-year-old Mr. McCallister had spent most of his life in north Georgia farming as a renter. Cotton was his living. A desire for land of his own was his tormenting ambition. Now it seems that dairy cows rather than cotton will bring him his wish. "I'm growing into the dairy business," Mr. McCallister explained as we watched his son steam-clean the milk cans. "It takes a little longer thataway than buying his glassed-in sleeping-porch shop.

The Dean's family never has difficulty deciding on a present for him; the logical thing is to give more power or hand equipment, with which he will make a table, a chair, or a chest of drawers; or another book on furniture and design.

"He made everything in the living room except the overstuffed furniture," said Mrs. Powell. This includes a colonial whatnot, two Sheraton fiddle-back chairs, a lamp, three end tables, and several little footstools. Mrs. Powell did the needlepoint for the chairs and footstools.

Dr. Powell made complete bedroom suites for both his wife and Betsy, his daughter. Mrs. Powell's suit is dark mahogany, while Betsy's is the light unstained mahogany. Both have four-poster beds with turned and carved posts.

At present he is working on a set of Hepplewhite dining room chairs. This set is complete except for upholstery and finishing the wood.

The Dean's shop is equipped with gadgets of every description and size, and woe be unto the person who pushes the wrong button to turn on the lights! That grinding and whirling may mean some giant dentist's tool is about to make a jab, or a saw may be aiming at a finger.

"See those scars?" asked Dr. Powell, as he held out his hand. "That is where this machine took off the tips of my fingers." But he laughed as he showed them, and said the little scars had paid for themselves.

Dr. George H. Boyd, head of the university biology department also became interested in furniture making, so he might be able to spend more time with his sons. All Dr. Boyd's leisure "minutes" are now spent in his basement shop, where he can forget the cares of the day.

"Everyone needs at least one interest that is, for him, complete relaxation. That is what my carving is for me. When my nerves are tight and tense, and I can not rest or sleep, a while in my shop is better than medicine." Dr. Boyd believes his hobby is cheaper and more interesting than golf, and he says if you don't believe wood-carving is exercise, just try it!

His biggest project so far has been a gate-leg dining room table, but he is now working on a four-poster bed for his wife's Christmas present.

EXPERT RECOGNIZES 3 DISTINCT ACCENTS IN AMERICAN SPEECH

By CLIFFORD F. BUTCHER.
North American Newspaper Alliance.

Madison, Wis. Some say "either" and some say "eyether," but either is correct if you say it in the right place. If you grew up in an "either" community, "either" it is for you. But if you come from the "eyether" country you must keep the "i" in "either" forever under blankets or in a suspected of affection. The cultivated New Englander watches a "fameh" on his "farm," while the equally well educated middle westerner sees a "farmer" on his "farm." Each is correct according to the dictates of his environment. For pronunciation is largely a matter of geography. Take the word of an expert, Dr. John S. Kenyon, who was pronunciation editor of the latest edition of Webster's dictionary.

This year, on leave of absence from Hiram College, Professor Kenyon is at the University of Wisconsin as a research associate in English on the Carnegie Foundation grant, compiling the first American pronouncing dictionary—a pronouncing dictionary of American words on a colloquial basis—a dictionary of cultivated conversational English as it is spoken in this country.

"A certain pronunciation becomes correct when it is in actual use by a sufficient number of cultivated speakers," says Dr. Kenyon. "The trend both in England and America is away from the formal pronunciation of stage and lecture platform toward the colloquial pronunciation of cultivated conversation."

CREEK VS. CRICK IS MATTER OF CHOICE

"How do you pronounce 'creek' when not in dress clothes? Do you use the northern or Scottish dialect form, rhyming with 'seek,' which gradually sneaked into good use, or the early standard English form, rhyming with 'sick,' which was used by Chaucer and is still used by innumerable cultivated people? The school-marm, inevitably armed with the 'ee' spelling, has been trying for years, but has not yet succeeded in driving out 'crick.'"

The professor, who has degrees from Hiram College, the University of Chicago and Harvard in this country and who studied English language and phonetics for two years at University College, London, as holder of the Soames prize for research in phonetics, says "crick" himself. He grew up in Ohio.

"Scholars recognize three distinct regional pronunciations in the United States—eastern, southern and general American (western)," he says.

It's worth noting that the orthoepists accord the westerners own pronunciation the title of "general" American.

And why not? The professor demands. There are perhaps 10,000,000 Americans who use the eastern accent, those who live in New England and the North Atlantic states. The southern accent is native to some 25,000,000 more below Mason and Dixon's line. But almost 100,000,000 speak with a western accent. The general American pronunciation extends even beyond the Connecticut river on the east.

HELPS HIS STUDY SPEECH OF RHYMES

Recently scholars have been according the University of Wisconsin the last word on English pronunciation. Lexicographers, linguists, onomatopoeists—men who have made the study of words their life work—are turning to Madison to learn how certain words have been pronounced in particular regions of the United States and England at various times in the last 400 years. The university is the only place in the English-speaking world where the information is immediately available in such prodigious quantities.

It all started when Professor Miles L. Hanley, of the English department, began a study of English and American rhymes some five years ago. As associate director from 1934 of the Linguistic Atlas of the United States, sponsored by the American Council of Learned Societies, Professor Hanley was impressed by the need of a more thorough study of the historical development of words. When WPA and NYA programs at the university made scores of assistants available, he began his stupendous research project.

For more than five years Professor Hanley's assistants have been thumbing through the works of the poets, listing rhymes, collecting them, indexing them. The original goal of 500,000 rhymes was passed long ago and 450,000 more were added.

"Large portions of the materials are ready now for use," says Mrs. Hanley, owner herself of several degrees in English, who is supervising the collection of the rhymes. "When finished, the collection will present a survey of rhymes used by the principal English and American poets of the last four centuries; together with a list of minor poets. Since the study of rhymes on a scale large enough to rule out accidents and poetical idiosyncrasies is one of the chief sources of evidence on the pronunciation of a given period and on changes that have taken place in the past, such a collection as this is essential for any historical study of English and American pronunciation."

The mass of evidence assembled in the rhyme collection is irrefutable. And that is why, as the collection has taken shape, scholars from other schools have gone to Madison to carry on their studies of the language. Last year, one of the notable users of the collection was Dr. Harold Whitall, who, as a Guggenheim fellow, spent the year at the university preparing a study of the development of Middle English vowels which has been published by the Linguistic Society of America. This year it is Professor Kenyon.

The professor's workshop, it just outside the cube in the basement of the new library where Mrs. Hanley and her group of workers are completing assembling those rhymed pronunciations of 400 years. He sits in a hollow square of desks littered with dictionaries, reference books, and notes. He springs out of his cushioned swivel chair to greet the visitor and insists that he sit in it, while he himself takes a less comfortable chair and leans back with his elbow among the pages of manuscript that have flowed from his pen.

DESIGNED KEYBOARD FOR HIS TYPEWRITER

The keyboard and type bars of that portable typewriter are of his own design. They bear the symbols of the international phonetic alphabet, familiar to students of language. Those symbols, more than forty of them, make it possible to indicate on paper the exact sound of letter or word.

"Under the diacritic method of marking pronunciation," he says, "one symbol may have a half-dozen different sounds, or one sound may be expressed by five or six letters. The phonetic alphabet has a single symbol for each speech sound, and each speech sound has a single symbol."

Collaborating with Dr. Kenyon on the pronouncing dictionary is Professor Thomas A. Knott, of the University of Michigan English department. Professor Knott, chooses the words that are to be included in the pronouncing dictionary. Professor Kenyon records the manner in which they are pronounced.

Among the books on Dr. Kenyon's desk is the English pronouncing dictionary, edited by Daniel Jones, of Cambridge. Its preparation was a simpler job than that which occupies Professor Kenyon. It is a dictionary of English as spoken by the products of the English public schools—the only cultivated pronunciation accepted in England. In America, for many words there are dozens of pronunciations within the bounds of the three principal pronunciation regions. From among them the professor must choose not more than one for each region—the one in most common use.

How does he do it?

Well, there are the rhymes, and the Linguistic Atlas. There are other dictionaries—"Typical examples of their own pronunciation and also have painstakingly investigated for us the types of pronunciation in various parts of the United States and Canada. But when all this information is assembled, the editor of the dictionary must fall back on his own knowledge of the "cultivated colloquial" language of the country. It's his own judgment, based on a lifetime of study, that guides the final selection. He uses his head.

Choosing from so many dialectal variations is a prodigious job. "It might be hard," he says, "to find two cultivated people who would pronounce exactly alike all the words in the following: When Mary Harris was married in Marion, various hilarious associates made merry a hundred ways and shared the hospitable home of her parents."

Typewriter Talk

By ROBERTA LYNDON.

Unhappy people in the world are divided into two classes: those who don't know what they want and those who know what they want and don't know how to get it.

Lots of people stay in a rush all the time for the effect it gives.

Women dress to please men and displease other women.

People who express opinions the most frequently aren't usually the ones who give them the most thought.

All's fair in love and war, except the expense.

Nothing is as over when it's over as a love affair and a political campaign.

Ralph Shoemaker makes all kinds of ships, but they must have some historical significance. He likes the old Constitution and similar frigates which are decked out with interesting experiences.

Ralph Shoemaker was born with transportation in his blood.

He always has loved ships, was born on a small island in the heart of the St. Lawrence river, and now works for a transportation firm.

But the thing is that he can't get ship-building out of his veins. He came from a family of ship builders. He shows you faded pictures in an old family album of his grandfather's shipyards, and then the ships that numerous other relatives constructed. Even before his teenage he built a ship model and his grandfather constructed a craft after young Ralph's specifications. So he actually has held a love for every mode of transportation.

Now he's out of the water life. He has been in it from two angles—ship building and sailing for Uncle Sam. He holds a first mate's rating in the Merchant Marine, but still he has a strong love for ship building. The walls of his Ponce de Leon avenue apartment are papered with ships, his doorsteps are old ship wheels, and his bedspreads are embroidered with ship arrays. He has a young daughter who shares his love for ships. Her room is decorated with all sorts of nautical things. Shoemaker likes to build ships; not just any ships, but those with historical backgrounds. He likes to make series of them starting with one of Columbus' crafts and coming up to the modern Queen Mary or the Queen Elizabeth. He builds intricate ships. Some have as many as 75 small pieces for them.

This hobby craftsman doesn't build model ships to sell. He builds them because he likes to see them shape up. In the summer he sits in the backyard under a tree and whittles out the hulls for his constructions.

He has built many ships, so many that he knows just exactly what he wants to do about making each one look right. For instance, he found that painting a white seam between two colors in the hull was rather treacherous business. So now he cuts a thin strip of white paper and pastes it on between his colors, which usually are black and red. His main tools are a jack knife and a small brace and bit. Of course he uses quantities of string and pins, but he buys little gadgets such as anchors and wheels from a little firm he found tucked away in New York.

Shoemaker wears thick-lensed glasses and complains of his inability to read extensively. But when it comes to using his eyes for tedious work on his ship models he just tosses the glasses away. He has this little problem all worked out by planning several ships at a time, so when his eyes tire of one model he switches to another.

His Love for Ships Is Kept Alive In Building Hobby

up a bunch. But when a man loses one, it don't hit him so hard. Every year I've got a couple of young ones freshening up. I'm going to have a real lot of cubs by the time that boy's old enough to take over."

Like two dozen homesteaders who have small dairies, McCallister grows all of his feed except a small amount of concentrates. With equipment for steam-cleaning and time that he is able to get grade A prices for his products.

This business of soil building and the home-growing of feed is the foundation upon which this new type of farming being carried out on the Piedmont and Briar Patch projects is based. Frequent demonstrations in terrace maintenance are held. Project Manager F. C. Peniel and his assistant help homesteaders with problems of crop rotation, the selection of cover crops, etc. And just as important a part of the new foundation is the growing of food for the family.

"I always work my garden first," Mr. McCallister said. "With cotton selling for what it is, I don't care what kind of a cotton crop a fellow makes, let him start eating out of a paper sack and he's lost right now." The McCallisters' smokehouse is lined with jars of home-canned fruits and vegetables. The winter's supply of meat is hanging in the pig pen. A bull calf is ready to be slaughtered and canned. Mrs. McCallister will be serving the last of that beef next August or September.

Mrs. Wallace, the chicken farmer's wife, put up 250-odd jars of food, despite a dry season. Henry Grady West's mother has her cupboards so full, she said, she could have grand-children visiting all winter long without too much worry. This last summer Piedmont and Briar Patch homesteaders produced an average of 396 quarts of food apiece. By growing wheat and having their own flour ground locally, families are saving as much as $45 a year.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Kinard know how much it costs to feed a family of six "out of a paper sack." In 1925, Mr. Kinard gave up farming for a job as a grocery salesman. In 1930 he became a "runner" in a Bibb Manufacturing Company mill, and lived in one of its villages.

"I tried to have a garden in town," Mrs. Kinard said. "But it wasn't much use. Things kept killing it." She guessed they were working it because they were homesteaders for the country. After three years of trying to live and feed the children on an average of $60 a month, the Kinards moved back to Jasper county.

"I've been growing a garden and canning all my life," Mrs. Kinard said. "But I never put up half the stuff I've been since we moved here." Following the suggestions of Miss Thelma A. Jones, the project's home economist, Mrs. Kinard plants more than a dozen varieties of vegetables. An orchard, planted the first year, has a crop of fruit. Mrs. Kinard cans sausage, steak, stew meat...

"You can put up anything with a pressure cooker," she said. "You can keep it all winter and open it the middle of next August. It's still good." (The use of a pressure cooker is another thing Miss Jones has taught her.)

"The children are so much healthier," Mr. Kinard put in.

"I guess we all are. It's hard work, I'll tell any man that. But it's something you feel you're getting something out of."

The first year Mr. Kinard joined Piedmont community he cleared 20 acres. Each year he has added to this, and now has 42 acres of land ready for the plow. Unlike the old days when newly cleared land meant strong earth and high yields, Piedmont farmers must follow their clearing of briars and scrub trees from the eroded slopes with careful terracing and the sowing of soil-enriching plants before the land is worthy of a crop.

"It will take a good 10 years to get it into shape," Mr. Kinard spoke of his farm. There is more woodland to be thinned out, many old fields to be developed for his milk cows. Though cover crops have increased his corn yield from 12-12 bushels per acre to 18 bushels, he thinks this can be bettered.

"That boy of mine," Mr. Kinard smiled, "he loves the country. He's as good a farmer as anybody." Fourteen years of age, Bobbie Kinard is a leader in the Future Farmers of America chapter at the Piedmont project school. His FFA cotton patch produced 480 pounds of lint.

On both Piedmont and Briar Patch farming projects are handsome school buildings built by the Farm Security Administration and deeded to the county for use as public school and community centers. Homesteaders and their neighbors come together for barbecues, square dances, union Sunday schools, farmers' meetings. Homemaking clubs have demonstrated here, and in the evenings there are classes where adults can get practical information about approved farming and homemaking methods.

Once each year the Piedmont community invites its neighbors and town friends from Monticello to a real old-fashioned feed. Except for sugar, coffee and seasoning, everything served is home grown.

The Briar Patch school has a canning center, with huge pressure cookers and other equipment suitable for large-scale operations and the use of metal containers. Housewives from miles around bring their corn, apples, meat, etc. and work together. Last year a "peeling party" put up 878 cans of apples in one day.

For the use of equipment, each housewife pays a "toll" of much produce. This food is canned by the group for use in the school's lunchroom.

No more must children squat in the corner of the playground with a cold sweet potato for lunch, or try to devour a hard-boiled egg squashed between a soggy biscuit. For at both the Piedmont and Briar Patch schools students are served hot lunches. (Half the children attending Briar Patch school live off the project. About 25 percent of the students at Piedmont are not from homesteader families.)

Five cents, for instance, buys a lunch of stewed corn, fresh snap beans, cornbread or whole-wheat rolls, cocoa or milk, prunes, and an apple. The five cents may be paid in cash or in produce—eggs, home-canned food, garden vegetables, etc.

Classes come in and eat together. Everyone gets the same thing. "Seconds" can be had without extra cost. "Just raise your hand." Many a child has received first instructions here in the use of a fork. Many more have first eaten—and learned to like—such strange dishes as carrots, slaw made with raw vegetables, greens cooked without fat meat.

All summer long WPA workers, aided by the parents, can fresh vegetables contributed by homesteaders and farmers in the neighborhood. Last season the two schools together canned 19,221 quarts of food. Much of the food preserved at Briar Patch was grown in a six-acre garden, directly across the road from the school.

"Folks laughed when I told them how many kinds of vegetables I was going to get from this plot," said Mrs. Thomas Richardson, who manages the lunchrooms and superintends the canning at two large schools. Late in October when the neighbors were saying "it's too dry for anything," she was still seeing snapped beans picked fresh each morning.

The garden is a forceful demonstration of the variety and quality of vegetables this Piedmont soil can produce.

Shortly after ex-shoe salesman Gordon Wallace moved into his bungalow at Piedmont last winter his daughter suffered an attack of diphtheria, that brought her near death. A doctor called daily for six weeks. Often he came twice in a single night.

The Wallaces did not think to mention this matter until long after the fate of their children, their pigs and their pepper corn had been discussed. To most farm families such an occurrence, with the accompanying doctor and drug bills, would mean near ruin. The Wallaces received the complete service for $12.50, and the doctor did not suffer in the bargain.

All homesteaders belong to a co-operative medical association. Each couple with one child pays $12.50 a year. One dollar is paid for each child in addition. For their money, homesteaders receive complete doctor service, both home and office visits, with a free choice from among all physicians in the county. Drugs prescribed by these physicians are cared for by the state, as well as all emergency operations. If hospitalization is necessary, co-operation has obtained a rate

Camera Calm Needed

Nothing was said regarding James Craig and what the picture would do for him. So what happens? At the end of the intervals of praise for Ginger, the lobby re-echoes with—"James Craig—Who is he?—What has he done before?" In his rather brief role, Mr. Craig showed the stuff of which stars are fashioned. He was completely confident of his ability to please us. Whereas "Wyn" seemed cowed by his opportunity. Morgan has been much better in less important pictures.

I wonder how much of a coincidence was Shirley Temple's box-office drop and the shyness she developed in the last year of her contract at Twentieth Century-Fox? Shirley seemed afraid to try anything new in her screen characterizations. And failing something new, she had to cling to the cuteness and lisps of her successful baby period. I hope that when she starts her new movie career, she will step boldly off the safe ledge of the known and take her chance in uncharted spaces.

I remember once having a chat with James Cagney on why big-shots who have been forced off the screen by bad pictures are seldom good when they return to the camera. Katharine Hepburn, of course, is an exception—but even she required a successful stage play to give her the necessary belief in herself. "What happens to them in the intervals?" I asked Cagney. "They've lost confidence," he replied, "and when that happens to an actor, it's good night."

That's the reason John Barrymore goes on—he's lost his memory, but retained his confidence. Mickey Rooney's emoting is sheer and unadulterated confidence. If you or I could so far forget ourselves that we could cry before a camera, not to mention the cameraman, electricians, grips, visitors, etc., too, why Master Rooney can, we, too, might be movie stars.

Have I made my point? And do you agree with me?

YOUR NATURE Shows IN THE FLOURISHES OF HANDWRITING

By ANN ETHEDRIDGE.

IF YOUR pressure is light when you write, you are sensitive. If you open your o's, you are big-hearted. If your writing extends farther than the letter large, your capacity to explain things in detail is evidenced by his carefulness in completing words and sentences. His excellent flow of language is expressed in the fact that his letters are tied together in a continuity chain. His conception of the artistic is shown by flourishes, and his sensitiveness of touch.

"Salesmen lack capacity for expressing details, therefore they are notoriously poor in writing reports. On the other hand, the auditor's handwriting must be condensed and regimented as a style for men in order to fit into columns of capitation. His handwriting will conform to this, because he is an auditor from inclination, such inclination being portrayed in the writing."

"Why do newspaper people happen to make a success in their field? Because nature has made them that way and has shown the inclination in the writing. The handwritings of the editorial writer and the reporter are different. The editorial writer, doing what he is usually partisan in his views. His writing indicates this. On the other hand the reporter must portray life as it is. His mind forces him to use plenty of paper, widely spaced, in order to have room for after-thoughts. His nose-for-news traits correspond to the salesman's traits, in that both barge in where others fear to tread. Therefore, their handwriting analyzes along the same lines. The story-writer has mechanical sense, as portrayed in his square letters."

Professor Watling, born in England, said that he began collecting autographs in the city of London when he was eight old. He noticed that while no two people in the world wrote exactly alike, that people of certain habits had the same characteristics in their writing.

His father, who did the first London suture-clearance project, took the future graphologist to his office one day where several old men bookkeepers, perched on high stools, had great ledgers spread out in front of them. A look at the writing revealed to the boy the fact that the handwriting of every one of those bookkeepers was similar, although each had individuality. After that, he collected signatures of military people, salesmen, lawyers, and found that the same rules applied to every profession. He learned all this over a period of many years.

So now, with long experience and knowledge gained from the scientific study of handwriting, the professor, who is in his late fifties, spends all of his time helping people to find the right niches. If the job a person is not doing does not conform to the handwriting, it means that the person is attempting the wrong vocation and should change to the right one. The handwriting, in the hand of the graphologist, will tell which one.

Atlanta Amateur Aviators Practice Flying at Dawn

A FEW WEEKS ago a pilot took off from Candler Field and, with two companion fliers, joined the search near Cartersville for little Murray Upshaw. About two months ago during an air show at LaGrange, a blonde girl pilot brought down her plane with only minor injuries, when attempt to crank the propeller in midair failed. This morning, a student felt the thrill of his first solo flight. These three people, and 46 others like them, make up one of Atlanta's unique organizations—"The Dawn Patrol." This flying club was organized last May at Candler Field and is composed of boys and girls whose daytime jobs and interests force them to fly during what would be the early morning shadows are still long across the runways and the frost is still intact upon the hangar roofs.

"The club," says Leroy Amick, the club's first president, "crystallized from a few chance meetings. I guess when people have a common interest they nearly always end up by organizing. We've had a lot of fun and we've studied some, too. Believe it or not, a lot of flying comes out of a book! At least we have to know the answers when the CAA starts asking the questions."

Among the members is read-headed little Regina Pudney, from College Park. Regina goes out for an hour in the clouds, then returns home to teach 20 piano students, play accompaniments for record making, and to practice four hours a day. She is also a summer student at the Juillard School of Music in New York.

"The second time I got in a plane," says Regina, "I flew it. I went up for a sightseeing ride and liked it so well I started taking lessons. I have to fly early in the morning because of my music. But I think I would fly then, anyway. The air is smoother than the traffic less. Things can get pretty crowded up there sometimes when a couple of airliners and coming in and a flock of cubs are trying to keep out of the way of what looks from the air like half the persons in the world are trying to get out of the tower you can't stop and wait!"

A good excuse for cross-country hops is the "Breakfast Club," which meets in various parts of the state. All planes which can be rented, begged or borrowed are down to the designated airport and "Dawn Patrol" members meet with other early morning pilots. South Carolina has a "Sunday Morning Breakfast Club" also. The custom seems to be spreading.

That navigation problems present some difficulty to some of the newer members does not dampen their enthusiasm. What does it matter if Kennesaw mountain looms suddenly ahead on a straight Athens-to-Atlanta course. Judging from reports around, anyway, "It's faith," says one member, "which moves mountains. In flying, it's faith that keeps 'em still!"

If, as has happened, a propeller slings loose and disappears in midair, the plane comes down on a forced landing in a convict camp, the pilot does not complain, but gets a truck, hauls the plane in, repairs it and takes it up again. If a student tangles with a high-tension line, he may have some arguments with the electrical guardian angel and doesn't grumble because he must have a small tear in his suit mended. This also is not fiction. The proper club ethics, one is told, is to show complete surprise when someone pulls a handful of wheat from the landing gear of your plane after a "cross-country." So far the club has had no serious accidents.

IN MIDWINTER

Prints Tell of Spring

By WINIFRED WARE.

EVEN BEFORE little crocuses push up from the ground, you'll see flowers blooming. The flowers won't be in your garden nor on your window sill. They'll be on your dress.

Prints, following close on the heels of Santa Claus, are showing up to brighten the days for those who must remain at home during late winter, and to travel blithely with those who cruise or vacation.

Floral patterns seem to be favored for prints; sprays of leaves, daisies and other flowers, reminding us that spring may not be far behind, cavort as gaily as if the days were sunny, over silken backgrounds, light or dark. Printed patterns for daytime dresses are rather small, but designs for beach clothes and for evening dresses often are large and splashy. The materials are silk for daytime, linens, cottons and chintz for cruise and beach, and silks, satins, jerseys and novelty weaves for evening.

Examples of prints that are available and extremely fashionable right now for wear under fur coats and later with spring coats are shown. At right is a little red dress with a peplum and draped neckline. The skirt is gracefully flared and edged at bottom with a tiny ruffle. A taffeta petticoat is made onto the skirt. You guessed it, it is red. Dress only $10.95. At right: A shirtwaister in chartreuse, with sea shells in its design. This is a beautifully soft silk. Sea shells also button it up the front. Priced $29.95.

Left below: Somewhat larger is the printed design in the black and white costume worn by Miss Mary Jo Venable. Gay, white flowers stand out against a background of black and tumble casually onto the skirt of black. Black patent is stunning with such a dress, and for this one we chose a patent bag of giant size and patent pump whose bows are edged with white. White gloves and a black hat of faille are worn. A pin with head of white, ornaments the hat. The dress $29.95.

Right below: A pointed peplum, apron style, and draped bodice feature this dress whose print is leaf sprays. The dress is red with red and white print. A sash which fastens under arm is tied in the back, like a little girl's pinafore. Dress $10.95.

For further information regarding any clothes or articles mentioned on this page, write or phone The Constitution, WA. 6565, Winifred Ware.

Little Treasures

At this time of the year every woman feels that she must do something about her winter wardrobe. There is nothing like a change of accessories for putting new life into an outfit that has a drab look. Here are two matching pieces, a bag and shoes in patent and gabardine.

The bag is big and shiny, has gabardine trim up the sides and around the handle and fine gathers on one side. Inside are spacious pockets designed to carry many a thing, and a zippered special case. Price $2.98.

Shoes to match the bag are patent with gabardine side insets. Combination of two fabrics in shoes is smart for wear now and later; this pair is full of style and will go confidently into the spring. Price $3.98.

Another red print is this in a leaf design. A peplum effect gives it a long waist line; and shirring, short sleeves and large cluster of flowers at the throat give it little girl charm. Miss Betty Holcomb is the model.

Black and white, a combination eternally smart, is shown here. The dress of long torso lines is black and white print running into a solid black skirt. A small hat of faille, long bag of black patent and patent pumps finish this costume.

JUSTICE AND JEAN CHIAPPE

Mysterious Death Climaxes Ex-Chief's Ambitious Career

By PETER LEVINS.

MAY 1, 1928, is still remembered with a chuckle and a fond sigh by the surviving innkeepers and tobaccoists of the suburbs of Paris, for that was the day that Jean Chiappe, head of the Paris police, first applied on a large scale his new idea of "preventive political policing."

From dinner-time the night before until after breakfast the day after, thousands of would-be Sacco-Vanzetti sympathizers arrived in the suburbs in all kinds of conveyances under police escort. It had all been accompanied by Chiappe, ambitious little Corsican, after he learned that several thousand workmen intended to turn the annual May Day celebration in Paris into a protest meeting against the execution in the United States of Sacco and Vanzetti.

TYPE THAT CAUSED COLLAPSE OF FRANCE

This incident is perhaps the most characteristic of the personality of Jean Chiappe, spiritual successor of the famed Joseph Fouché, Napoleon's police chief, under whose zealous administration prisons were filled to overflowing with political offenders while common criminals freely plied their trade. But in this Chiappe was not like Fouché; Chiappe was hard on the common criminal; the only ones he spared were his friends.

To review the life of Jean Chiappe is to understand further what was the matter with France in the years before her collapse. He was an outstanding example of a certain type of official that led France into sickness and death.

There are numerous mysteries about him—the latest mystery happened only the other day.

Chiappe came into the world at Ajaccio, capital of Corsica, on May 3, 1879, a few blocks from the birthplace of Napoleon. The Chiappe family was famous for its royalist leanings; indeed this sympathy was so strong that Jean's granduncle, Ange Chiappe, Corsican deputy to the convention of the French revolution, was one of those who voted against the execution of Louis XVI.

The youthful Corsican dreamed early of emulating the career of the Little Corporal. He clung to that dream to the last. Persuading his family to let him finish his schooling in Paris, he spent a couple of years at the university there, and as early as the age of 18 he was already seeking connections and work as a free-lance journalist, which in France was the usual beginning for a politician. Three years later he entered the government service as a secretary in the prisons management department of the ministry of the interior.

Here he immediately built for himself a sphere of influence as a contact man with the press. It is known that he supplied one of the leading Paris papers with inside tidbits on the conduct of the ministry in which he worked. As you will see, he lacked principles; his own career was all that counted with him.

By 1909 he had taken the first step up the French political and social ladder—he was appointed chief of cabinet of the general secretariat of the ministry of the interior. Because all appointments in the administration of the provinces were cleared through his office. At the same time he attached himself to the entourage of Aristide Briand, who was then already one of the leading political figures in France.

Chiappe's methods of climbing earned the wholehearted contempt of the "Old Tiger," Clemenceau—never, throughout his life, could he stand the dapper little Corsican. Clemenceau felt that he was a bootlicker, one who would stoop to any depths to attain a personal advantage.

The year before the outbreak of the World War I found Chiappe shining up to minister of interior Malvy, who elevated him to the position of Chief of Cabinet. Malvy, later co-defendant with Caillaux in the famous treason proceedings following the war, recognized Chiappe's special talents, using his young subordinate, using him as liaison officer to the press, as well as to the wealthier people of France.

Chiappe's career stagnated during the war years, chiefly because he had picked the wrong political group. The Malvy-Caillaux appeaser crowd was suspected by Clemenceau, and Chiappe was automatically classed with them. But, while the politicians in power detested him, the Corsican knew how to use the press to gain popularity with the people.

He visited the race tracks, and invariably managed to get in the way of a photographer. He was constantly seen at those places in Paris regularly covered by the press. If a beautiful woman was with him, which was usually the case, it made that much better picture. His military service was brief, as Malvy had him ordered back to duty in the ministry.

In the early war years, a young Greek named Nico Zographos (Nick the Greek) arrived in the French capital and began a notable career as a gambler. He was to become known as the king of the French gamblers, owner of a string of gambling casinos, and also as a roving, secret book-maker in the stands at the race tracks.

His illicit activities were getting him into more and more frequent conflict with the police when, one day, he met Jean Chiappe.

The two men were immediately sympathetic to each other. Each no doubt realized what the other could do for him. So began a friendship.

Chiappe gave the Greek letters of protection and introduction to all possible government agencies that might make trouble for him. Thus it has been said the later chief of police of Paris laid the foundation for a score or more of suicides caused by gambling losses to Nico Zographos.

Among those who took their lives in the decade following the meeting of the two men were: French Minister of Finance Klotz, who had been one of the helpers in Chiappe's career. Comte de Beaurain, son of one of the most aristocratic of French families, who lost 18,000,000 francs.

William Coats, British industrialist, who lost 50,000,000 francs, the largest gambling loss ever known. Even the Henry Ford of France, Andre Citroen, got into financial difficulties after losing 11,000,000 francs to the Greek syndicate.

Peculiarly enough, the careers of both Chiappe and his gambling pal took another spurt forward within a few months of the meeting. Paris police looked the other way when they noticed M. Zographos at one of the tracks—and meanwhile M. Chiappe entertained his friends and acquaintances with lavish abandon. No doubt about it, the money was rolling in from some source.

In 1918 Chiappe showed his political colors—the same which are today the foundation of the Vichy government—publicly at the pronouncing of sentence in the famed Caillaux affair. Caillaux and Malvy, active in the interests of a separate peace with Germany during the war, were prosecuted on charges of high treason. While Caillaux was acquitted, Malvy got five years in exile.

Chiappe not only testified in defense of Malvy, but, after sentence was pronounced, went up to him and shook his hand while the elite in the courtroom cheered. Throughout his career thereafter the Corsican persevered in his opinion that France and Germany should co-operate on the continent, and that strong statism was the way of salvation. It is said that these beliefs were in great measure responsible for his later part in the Stavisky scandal.

During the years until 1924 he lived a gay life while he attended to his duties in various leading positions in the ministry. His political friends were out of office, and so his own career marked time. Rumor in Paris at the time had it that he was an active participant in the Greek gambling syndicate but there was never any public record to that effect.

Then Eduard Herriot brought the so-called Radical-Socialist party back into power, and once more Chiappe's star began to rise. The climax came with his appointment, in October, 1924, as chief of the surete generale, France's own FBI, whose duty it was to know everything about everybody.

INSTITUTED MANY EXCELLENT REFORMS

Chiappe used his three and a half years in this office to consolidate his personal political power and to make himself independent of party support. In his capacity as chief, he had access to the "dossiers" of all the leaders of France—and he made use of them to the fullest extent. It was undoubtedly due to such pressure on personalities that, when his own Radical-Socialist party was swept out of power by the near bankruptcy of France, he was named prefect of police by a cabinet of national concentration.

In effect, this position in Paris took the place of a mayor, which the French capital does not, or did not, have. As a technical police position it had very little merit, but as an office through which a man could gain popularity it had no equal. And Jean Chiappe knew well how to make himself beloved by the populace.

Named in July, 1927, he began his administration of the police department by promising a number of reforms, many of which turned out to be excellent. He put the relationship between himself and the individual policemen of Paris on a very friendly, almost pal-like basis. Once, when he had received many complaints that Parisian police officers were guilty of immoral conduct, he replied:

"You can't police with archbishops." On another occasion he invited the entire police force to a banquet in the Palais de Champs Elysee, at his own expense. He fed 18,000 men and shook hands with each of them.

A few weeks later it was common gossip that the reason Chiappe could afford to spend 100,000 francs for this feast was that, only the week before, his friend, Nico Zographos, and the Greek syndicate had added up their winnings at Cannes and found a net profit of 11,000,000 francs.

A little fellow who threw out his chest and looked at you out of melting black eyes under a bald pate, Chiappe was often called "Le Petit Corse" in sneering tones. Women, however, claimed that he had the greatest sex appeal of any man in French public life. This led Sacha Guitry, the famous stage and screen star, to remark, "He is the Marlene of police."

Like Leslie Hore-Belisha, England's dynamic erstwhile war secretary, Chiappe also got himself publicity with a traffic idea. He spoke loudly of protecting pedestrians against the rushing death on four wheels that was the Paris taxicab, and invented the "clou."

PREFERRED CORSIANS AS POLICE OFFICIALS

These are rows of small metal plates which delineate pedestrian traffic lanes at Paris street corners. The idea caught on, and Parisians, Chiappe saw to it that anyone meeting an accident in the pedestrian lane was compensated fully by the insurance companies, or whoever else was responsible.

He also established the first woman's police squadron as part of the Paris police. As his aids in the department he preferred his own Corsicans and naturalized White Russians. His political opponents often made a loud issue of his predilection for these men as police officials, and openly accused him of building up an organization for a coup d'etat. Another criticism leveled at him was that he had made of the Paris police a state within a state.

It was Chiappe, too, who for the first time in the history of France made an attempt to enforce morals regulations that had lain inactive in the statute books for centuries. His raids on the Bois de Boulogne made cable news and the whole world laughed. But Parisians didn't like it, so the raids stopped.

He did, however, rid the boulevards of the prostitutes who used to walk freely from sundown to dawn, as well as the dirty picture vendors who greeted Americans on the Boulevards. Whenever they went for a walk in the afternoon with their wives and children. Also, he ordered stricter control of the Parisian brothels, which resulted in large increases in the secret funds of the police.

In 1928, the year after his appointment as head of the police, Chiappe married a wealthy widow, Marcelle Lemaire-Villiers, who became the patroness of police welfare institutions which Chiappe had thought up to further his popularity. Mme. Chiappe established a home for retired policemen at a cost of many millions of francs. She could have financed this out of the income she received from her estates and her stables; instead (it is said) she personally bludgeoned the money out of gamblers and other race track habitués, including Aga Khan and many a stable boy who might have reason to fear the police.

Nobody denies that Chiappe was a genius of organization. During his regime as "Bureau de Renseignements" he made as many as 102,000 dossiers on criminals and public persons annually. It was his thoroughness of organization that enabled him to solve one of the few cases that he himself took charge of during his administration.

When all his underlings had been baffled for weeks over the theft of one of the world's most famous gems, the Conde diamond, Chiappe took charge himself and within a few days of untiring questionings found the jewel secreted in an apple in the room of a servant girl.

In another case he is said to have used his genius to keep a murderer from justice. One night Oscar Dufresne, impresario of the popular Empire and Palace Music halls, was found in his office murdered by a blow on the head from a blunt instrument. The last to have been seen with the showman was an unidentified sailor.

Because of the prominence of the victim, who was known for his homosexual tendencies, Chiappe took charge of the case. For weeks every sailor that showed himself on the boulevards of Paris was stopped, taken to the nearest police station, questioned and then released. Paris laughed at the discomfort of the men with the red pompons on their hats.

Then Chiappe announced a startling discovery—not all sailors were sailors. The uniform and the cap with the red pompons was, he said, the secret costume of the pervers. Paris laughed again—and remembered that the son of one of the first officials of France had been quite friendly with Dufresne. From then on, Chiappe's investigating genius showed a remarkable aptitude for opaqueness. And the case was never solved.

By a strange coincidence which fits into the picture of the fall of France and the foreign policy of some of the members of the present Vichy government, the base of the unnamed showman was none other than Serge Alexandre Stavisky, whose gigantic swindles almost precipitated a revolution in February, 1934. And it was this same scandal which caused the dismissal of Chiappe as head of the Paris police.

Stavisky was born in a village near Kiev, Russia, in 1886, and moved to Paris with his father, a respectable dentist, when he was 14. The boy was registered at a good school, but within two years he left home to find his place in the underworld of the outer boulevards. Always sickly, he grew into manhood with a severe lung condition which may have come from his life in the cellars and slums of the underworld.

Minor infractions got into the record in 1926 for a first major offense was charged against him. That year he was arrested on the charge of embezzling 10,000,000 francs from a betting commissioner who had employed him for a short while. Barely two years after the embezzlement accusation, Stavisky received a document signed by Chiappe, certifying that the bearer was in the confidence of the police and was a trustworthy, upright man. In the intervening years until the discovery of his financial manipulations, the Russian-born man-of-affairs was frequently seen in the company of Chiappe, as well as other leading French politicians.

Evidence unearthed after the beginning of the present war by George Mandel's pre-Vichy ministry of interior indicated that Stavisky was an agent of the financial powers behind Hitler's Germany, and that much of the appeasement policy of certain French politicians could be traced to incriminating documents placed by Stavisky in the hands of the Wilhelmstrasse before his exposure. Mandel, who had been Clemenceau's secretary, had the Tiger's contempt for Chiappe and his friends.

The first act of the scandal that might have changed the history of Europe took place in Bayonne, France, on Dec. 23, 1933. Bayonne's Mayor Garat and Treasurer were charged on that day because a checkup revealed that all valuable jewelry had disappeared from the Municipal Pawn shop; and the checks that served as bonds to the Credit Municipale (certain French institutions called in France) had been tampered with.

The threads of the financial conspiracy led to fabulous Serge Stavisky. The arrested municipal officials blamed everything on Stavisky in almost childishly naive fashion. Asked where the jewels were, Tisserand ingeniously replied, "I sent them to Paris to Stavisky." And Garat, asked how it was possible that grown men would place such confidence in a man like Stavisky, replied, "Tisserand was introduced us."

Chiappe looked around to save his own skin. Stavisky had disappeared, but on Jan. 18, 1934, two police inspectors arrived near the resort town of Chamonix—and the next day it was reported that Stavisky had committed suicide just as he was about to be arrested.

Later investigation—by the press—brought to light the following peculiar circumstances about the "almost arrest" of the Russian:

1. On the evening of Jan. 7, Stavisky met with a short, elegant man, whose description fitted that of the Paris police chief, in a bistro in Chamonix.

2. When the two police officers arrived the next day, they located the villa where Stavisky was staying then went to phone Paris for instructions.

3. The medical examiner's report on the course of the bullet was that it could not have been self-inflicted.

The political reverberations were terrific. (The Stavisky affair is estimated to have cost 66 lives and $35,000,000.) Parliament was scheduled to meet on January 11, the second Tuesday in January. With a cabinet crisis at hand, certain groups wanted to seize power before parliament could convene and probe into the dark recesses of the scandal and the many politicians involved.

Two days before the scheduled meeting, a directorate of four men was proposed to take over the dictatorship of France: Andre Tardieu, Pierre Laval, Maxime Weygand and Jean Chiappe. However, the liberal parties, who told that Chiappe was slated to participate in an anti-corruption dictatorship, set up the opposition which culminated a few weeks later in bloody riots.

WOMAN'S DISCLOSURES CAUSED HIS RESIGNATION

Stavisky's wife, the actress Arlette Simon, vowed to avenge herself on Chiappe, whom she held responsible for the swindler's death. (She and Chiappe had once been lovers.) Mme. Stavisky told what she knew to an investigating magistrate, with the result that Chiappe was forced to resign his post on February 3, 1934.

The Corsican did not take his loss of power in good grace. Indeed, he told the then Premier-Designate, Daladier, "You will find me again on the street at the head of a mob."

To get him out of the way, he was offered the post of resident-general of Morocco, which he refused.

For a few months the disgraced ex-chief kept out of the public eye. In 1935 he stood for election to the chamber of deputies in his home district and was elected, but he could not occupy his seat because of election irregularities. Finally he did get himself elected the next year on an extreme rightist platform from a Paris district.

During the years that he was a member of the chamber he was very close to Laval, and often accompanied him to Rome. Throughout, he was a supporter of appeasement, and was one of the chief advocates of the abolition of the parliamentary system in France. It is quite likely that he saw himself as a future dictator of totalitarian France.

But such was not to be for Jean Chiappe. Recently he was appointed Vichy's high commissioner to Syria, succeeding a man whose sympathies were anti-Italian. While flying to his new job on November 27, according to a statement by the Vichy government, his transport plane was shot down by the British.

We don't know whether that was the way it happened. The British deny it.

If it turns out that he was, in fact, assassinated, nobody will be the slightest bit surprised.

If all the wealth in the world were divided . . . it wouldn't be more than a few months getting back where it started.

A good idea, like prominent relations, is something most people are glad to claim.

War is all Sherman said it was . . . and then we've had 75 years to make it more so.

Fools are people who think you are if you don't agree with them.

Ruth Dabney Smith, violinist, and Elizabeth Tillman, pianist, are seen rehearsing for their recital which holds the distinction of opening the New Year's musical season. Their concert will be January 7 at the Atlanta Woman's Club.

1941 Offers Brilliant Musical Fare

THE New Year will ring in a musical bill of fare more brilliant than any year that has preceded in the last decade, at least.

The All-Star Concert Series breaks the calm that was enforced by the building of part of the city auditorium by presenting the world-famous lyric tenor, Jussi Björling, a brilliant star of the Metropolitan Opera Company, on January 18.

The Atlanta Music Club's first "import" of the New Year will be the popular duo-pianists, Luboshutz and Nemenoff, on January 21, this concert to be in the Atlanta Woman's Club auditorium.

February holds a full calendar, starting with the Musical Club's presentation of the Kolchak String Quartet on February 4; the postponed concert of Yehudi Menuhin, an All-Star attraction, on February 7; a concert by the tremendously popular singing star of movie and concert fame, Jeanette MacDonald, at the city auditorium on February 11 (this is an extra attraction), and Lawrence Tibbett, renowned baritone, on February 26.

The St. Louis Symphony Orchestra, with Vladimir Golschmann, conductor, and Rosalyn Turek as piano soloist, will give a concert on March 25, this also of the All-Star Series.

An extra attraction of March will be matinee and evening performances of the Monte Carlo Ballet Russe, to be given in the Ballet Russe theater on March 28.

But April 28 is the day for the biggest event of the year—a four-day season of opera by the famed Metropolitan Opera Company. One of the operas, "Gounod's Faust," is included on the All-Star season tickets.

Miss Smith's Recital Opens 1941 Series.

The first musical event of the new year will be the violin recital to be given by Ruth Dabney Smith Tuesday night, January 7, at 8:30 o'clock in the ballroom of the Atlanta Woman's Club.

Miss Smith will be assisted by Elizabeth Tillman, pianist, who will play all her accompaniment.

Both musicians are well known in Atlanta artistic circles. Miss Smith has been concertmaster of the Atlanta Philharmonic orchestra for several years and has appeared in solo performances frequently both here and in other Georgia cities. She coached recently with Louis Persinger at the Juilliard School in New York.

Miss Tillman is a prominent pianist and takes an active part in the activities of the Georgia Federation of Music Clubs. She studied during the summer with Guy Maier at the Juilliard.

Two outstanding numbers of the program will be the performance of two complete concertos, the Mozart D major and the Paganini-Wilhelm D major.

Hayden's 'The Creation' January 26

Announcement comes from Anne Grace O'Callaghan, supervisor of music in the Atlanta high schools, that the music department of the city schools will present a performance of Hayden's great oratorio, "The Creation," on Sunday afternoon, January 26, in the city auditorium.

A chorus of 200 D major and school students, selected from the glee clubs of the four senior high schools, will be assisted by the Opera-Oratorio Society, of which A. Buckingham Simon is the director, and members of the Georgia Tech Glee Club, of which Walter Herbert is director. This gigantic combined chorus will be conducted by Mr. Simon in the performance.

Claire Coci's Hobby Is Crosses

WHEN Claire Coci plays an organ recital at Peachtree Christian church on Thursday night, January 9, she will wear one of the crosses of her famous collection. At every recital she plays she always wears one of her crosses.

Collecting crosses is Miss Coci's hobby. And she is one of the best-informed people in the country on crosses and their history. She can tell you all about crosses from the early ages through the Byzantine and other periods, right up to the modern age.

In her prized collection Miss Coci has a beautiful sapphire cross made by her father before his death. He was a jeweler. She also has old gold filigree crosses, one of silver filigree, and others of expert craftsmanship. One which she especially prizes was brought her from an old Burgundy town in France by the internationally known folk singer, Louise Aronoux. Miss Coci has over 100 crosses in her collection now, and it is growing steadily all the time.

Miss Coci is considered one of the finest organists that America has produced, and certainly one of the most brilliant woman organists. She is a native of New Orleans, where for nine years she was organist at the Jesuit's church, one of the largest churches in New Orleans. She made her New York debut in 1936, attracting attention for her skill that has won her a national reputation, and made her one of the most popular concert artists of the country.

Miss Coci's Atlanta concert will be a presentation of the Georgia chapter of the American Guild of Organists, of which Mrs. Victor Clark is dean. The concert will be open to the public.

Success Begins for a Girl Artist

AUGUSTA Oelschig wanted to paint. She wanted to paint fishermen of the waterfront in her native Savannah. She wanted to paint Geechee Negroes, and she wanted to paint children.

Recently an auctioneer sold one of Augusta's works in the art auction at the University of Georgia for three times what other pieces were bringing.

Why did people pay more for Augusta's work? Because Augusta took first place over all Georgia artists who exhibited their works at the show in the new Fine Arts Building at the university the last of November.

Between the time Augusta, a tiny blond girl, wanted to put people on canvas and the time she won first place among Georgia artists—well, that makes quite a story.

After finishing high school, she has set up her own

By CHARLEY DRAKE.

Augusta wanted to come to the University of Georgia to study art, so she obtained an NYA job in the archaeology department and came to Athens to study art. In the archaeology department she drew maps and illustrations, she scaled Indian villages and she copied ancient scripts.

It was rather dull at times when the work was deadly routine. But Augusta traced the maps, and between the rivers in relief she saw the face of little boys she would paint later. In the miniature mountain ranges she saw fisher folk whom she would some day capture in oil.

Came her senior year and Augusta won second place in the student exhibition. Then came graduation and the return to Savannah to paint the scenes she loved.

In the one year since graduation, she has set up her own studio in the art colony along the waterfront in Savannah, and she has been producing paintings so successfully that she is definitely going to make it her life's work.

When it came time for the exhibition of Georgia artists this year, Augusta sent up a painting she called "Young Boy." The painting not only won first place, but it won the distinction of being the first painting bought by a recently formed organization of Athens businessmen and was the first presented to the art department of the university. The businessmen's group was formed for the purpose of buying works of art for the department.

Now Augusta is happy painting the fishermen on the waterfront in her native Savannah. She is painting Geeches and she is painting children. Dreams do come true . . .

It never pays to trust people too far . . . particularly the ones who don't trust anybody else.

Violence of Nature, Human Emotions Dominate Year's News

Floggings Hold Spotlight on Crime Front

Snowstorm, Albany Tornado Are Weather's Contribution.

Beneath the tremendous overtones of war abroad and defense and politics at home, news of the state and city as revealed in the following day-to-day chronology marked an ever-interesting but not unusual year in 1940.

Violence of nature and of human emotions, made the biggest news, as usual—with the ice and snow storm of January, bringing its prodigious problems of welfare, and the Albany tornado of the following month capturing the biggest play in the headlines.

In the field of crime the flogging of Ike Gaston, bringing with it revelations of Klan complicity in other similar deeds, was the story of the year. The mysterious murder of a couple near McDonough, the violation of an elderly woman's grave at Loganville, the trial and execution of Congressman Frank Whelchel, accused of selling postal jobs, the solution of the Peek murder case, the capture of Floyd Woodward, were others of lesser import.

Politics made many headlines, among them the Rivers-Miller highway squabble, the hotly fought Governor's race, and the upset victory of Roy LeCraw over Mayor Hartsfield in the city election.

Not all the news told of strife, however. In the field of good will toward men were many outstanding stories—among them the bequest of the late E. P. McBurney, leaving $1,000,000 to art; the Rosenwald gift of $500,000 to Georgia teachers; the successful drive of the University Center for $1,300,000; the $1,000,000 gift of J. Bulow Campbell for the furtherance of religion, health and education; Judge Price Gilbert's gift of $100,000 to the University of Georgia; and the distribution of $268,000 to worthy causes here by Joseph B. Whitehead Foundation.

Good and bad, it follows here as it happened, day by day.

Bits of Crystal

No one would call "Coal Dust and Crystals" great poetry, yet the homespun quality of its lines clamors for rereading. Like most women poets, Eunice Lonkoske's poetry has more emotional than intellectual appeal. Out of the frozen drops

NOW THAT Christmas has come and gone . . . the problem of how to raise the Christmas puppy will present itself to many people. . . . The majority of folks have, no doubt, bought a young pup so they may have the pleasure and pride of starting from scratch and raising a good, strong, husky dog. . . . But before you settle down to the arduous task of piloting a mischievous and trusting pup through the canine pitfalls of life . . . remember . . . into the rearing must go plenty of love and affection and a world of patience. . . . Don't punish him too much or too often . . . he doesn't mean to do wrong and his memory is so terribly brief. IF YOU HAVE a pup from six to eight weeks old . . . realize that he must be kept warm and dry and fed small amounts often. . . . At this age a feeding every three hours is a good routine for a couple of months. . . . Britain Grows Bananas Ripe bananas will be coming out of Norfolk, England, soon, and experts who have examined them on the tree say they promise to excel for quality any they have seen in the West Indies. The fruit is growing in a cucumber bed at Costessey. The trunk has developed from a shoot until it is as thick as a man's body. R. G. Jarvis, who owns the tree, says his brother is also growing the fruit.

China in Cotton Snarl

Cotton textile manufacturing centers of China are confronted with increasing difficulties. Sales prospects for much of the mill output of Shanghai, by far the most important producing area in the country, are described as poor. The Tientsin mills operated at less than 50 per cent of spindle capacity last summer because of a shortage of raw materials and large stocks on hand.

WHAT HAPPENS EVERY DAY IN A HOTEL

By J. D. RATCLIFF.

WHAT happens in your own house when a few people drop in unexpectedly to spend the night? Turmoil? And what would happen at the breakfast table if six people ordered six kinds of eggs? Grim looks from the cook? You know all about the wreckage left in the wake of a party, and about the guests who fail to show up for dinner, leaving a cargo of perishable harpings on your icebox shelf. This gloomy recitation could go on indefinitely, but here's the point: there is a place where such problems are disposed of as easily as pressing a button. The place, of course, is that incredible institution, the big-city hotel.

How do they manage it? How do they provide broiled lobster for the boiled gentleman in 709 at 3 o'clock in the morning? How do they manage in the space of two or three hours to clean and press the evening dress that emerged from the suitcase looking as though it had been used as a saddle blanket? And how do they secure theater tickets for hit shows 15 minutes before curtain time when even the producer has to stand? How do they do these things while going about the routine business of providing beds for two or three thousand people and meals for 10,000? It's a nice study of efficient integration, fully as spectacular, if considerably less noisy, than a three-ring circus.

The modern hotel is an evolutionary development of the past century. Less than a hundred years ago even Boston's famed Parker House had no running water above the street floor. Guests slept on straw mattresses in unheated rooms. Travel guides suggested placing washstands against doors on retiring so rattling crockery would give warning of an intruder.

Colonial taverns that look so lovely in colored prints, weren't so attractive in the flesh. One posted a list of house rules that gave a clue to its services: Forpence a night for bed. No more than five to sleep in one bed. No boots to be worn in bed. Organ grinders sleep in the washhouse. No dogs allowed upstairs. No razor grinders taken in. Today's American hotels provide 1,200,000 rooms, serve a billion meals annually and represent the nation's seventh largest industry. They are designed to expect the unexpected; to care for the millions that drop in without warning, wanting food and rooms; and, generally, to do a job which would permanently wreck the equilibrium of most households. Let's see how they do it. Let's step backstage to see the half of the hotel that the guest encounters only rarely.

A Representative Hotel. For purposes of this side trip we have chosen a large first-class New York hotel. Its 2,900 rooms, with sleeping accommodations for 3,400 people, its 46 acres of floor space and $22,000,000 capital investment, make it fairly representative of the really big hotel. At peak it has 2,900 employees—approximately one for each guest. For convenience of patrons it maintains a kennel, two Turkish baths, two swimming pools, four restaurants, a hospital and a host of other services.

John Smith, of Ames, Iowa, our symbol of the crowd, has just registered. Before his luggage has been placed in an elevator by a bellboy, John's name has been copied on six record cards. One is racked for telephone operators and another has gone by pneumatic tube to the floor clerk. The accounting department has a third, and the "guest history" department a fourth. By the time John reaches his room he has assumed an identity in the big city. Within two minutes of registering he has a telephone connection all his own—an achievement that would require several days when moving into a new home or apartment.

His telephone is one of the 3,340 instruments in the hotel. Thirty-five telephone operators are needed to handle the calls of John and his neighbors. Altogether, the phone system handles a greater volume of business than the systems of Bolivia or Paraguay.

John wishes to have some laundry done. He has learned to expect no homey foolishness about Monday being washday. He knows that washday—or wash hour—falls whenever he says it shall fall. He informs the telephone operator of his wish.

The hotel, being a city within a city, must necessarily have its own laundry. In this case the establishment is big enough to handle the needs of a city of 25,000 people! As John gives his name and room number to the telephone operator she scrawls them on a teletypewriter which reproduces them in the laundry, three levels below the street. After a gatherer has collected John's bundle, his socks, shirts and shorts are dumped in with tons of other linen. His chances of ever getting them back appear remote indeed.

At capacity, the laundry employs 105 people. In a day's time it handles 10,000 face towels, 6,500 sheets and all uniforms worn by cooks, maids, waitresses, etc. John's microscopic bundle is grist for this giant mill. After being washed and whirled-dried, his shirts start down a line not unlike the assembly line of Detroit. One machine mends iron collars and cuffs, a second the bosom, a third does finishing and a fourth pins and wraps. Two shirts a minute come off this line and go to sorting bins and wrapping tables. Miraculously, all of John's clothes get back together —all within the space of three or four hours.

A similar establishment employing 25 people presses clothes in half an hour and cleans them in two or three. It never closes.

Our hero would like breakfast in his room, a luxury he enjoys at home only when he has double pneumonia. He asks for that remote, never-seen something-or-other called room service. Room service is a battery of six telephones in the first basement. John gives voice to his wish: orange juice, ham, eggs, toast, coffee. A waiter hands the order to the "fry chef," then sets up a table. The sharp eye of an inspector glances over the product of this collaboration to see that ham has been garnished with water-cress, eggs with parsley, and that the table is equipped with salt, pepper, butter, ice water. The table, like 200 others, rises up on one of 10 service elevators. Kitchens never close and the flow of food from them never ceases.

Crystal-Gazing Job. How does the kitchen department know when John is going to yield to a yearning for kippered herring, baked Alaska or fried whitebait and oyster crabs? How, indeed, is it possible to prophesy what the 10,000 people who appear on a busy day will want to eat?

This crystal-gazing job belongs to the food control office. So many people will almost inevitably consume so much roast beef on a Tuesday in November, and so much filet of flounder on a Friday in May. The starting point, therefore, is the record of past performances—the record for the same day on previous years. This, of course, is influenced by the "house count"—the number of guests in the hotel. The kitchen gets this figure at 5 a. m.

The banquet department furnishes information on the number of meals to be served to conventions, private dinners and dances in the rooms set aside for these purposes. Then there is the "forecast" prepared by the accounting department. In preparing these forecasts everything is taken into consideration: reservations, the number and sizes of conventions in town, and even weather. A blizzard on Long Island will make potential guests out of many commuters. These forecasts, note in passing, are 95 per cent accurate.

Wagons from city markets begin trundling in the day's supply of fresh foods at dawn. In a month's time these foods make an enormous bulk: 20,000 pounds of beef; 4,000 pounds of lamb; 2,400 pounds of peas; 6,000 dozen eggs; nearly three tons of coffee; and over four tons of butter. In a day's time the bakeshop contributes 20,000 rolls to this heap; and pastry and ice cream shops further increase its mass.

This food is prepared in six kitchens by 100 cooks and helpers. Lines of specialization are as sharply drawn as they are in a steel mill. One man will do nothing but bake, boil, fry and poach eggs. Another broils steaks, a third makes sauces and a fourth prepares great cauldrons of soup. Two hundred waiters carry this food to customers; and 300 men in the steward's department clean up the debris. Plate scrapings are collected and sold to hog-fattening ranches on the outskirts of the city. Then dishes go on conveyors that carry them through washing machines. In an average year breakage of glass and china amounts to $18,000.

John Smith's thirst needs occasional slaking, and 20 bartenders are ready for the job. In the course of a month they will dispense 7,000 bottles of whiskey, 1,400 bottles of gin, brandy and rum, 4,000 bottles of beer and 2,000 gallons of draft beer. Oh, yes, and bitters. They need over 700 bottles of bitters for cocktails. One man does nothing but break the emptied bottles, including any that are left in rooms. A New York state law requires that this be done.

There are, of course, many departments of the hotel with which the guest has no contact. He never sees the three men who work in the print shop on menus and other hotel printing, or the man who bales refuse paper, or the lonesome individual who works in a sub-basement sawing 300-pound cakes of ice into cubes. The guest is not likely to identify the eight house detectives, nor are the 250 maids much in evidence.

Dozens of behind-the-scenes departments are hidden from guest eyes. Over $20,000 worth of furniture repair work is done each year in shops on the premises. Two men are continuously at work renewing mattresses and another pair do nothing but take draperies down and hang them again, once they are cleaned. Four window washers, 30 painters and 20 plumbers work continuously during peak periods.

The whole engine department is safely hidden from the guest. Well below the street this department manufactures daily 130 tons of ice and electricity to light 18,000 bulbs.

All of this unseen activity is directed at keeping the customer comfortable and satisfied. When he is ready to depart he starts yet another batch of machinery in motion. Only in rare instances does the guest take the trouble to inform the management when he intends to depart. He simply packs his clothes and after a cross-country flight in wretched weather, the floor clerk notifies the main desk that John Smith, of Ames, Iowa, is on the way down. The identification is important, for there may be as many as 40 Smiths registered at one time.

Your Own Horoscope For Today

By ALICE DENTON JENNINGS Noted Atlanta Chirologist

What Today Means to You If You Were Born Between:

March 21st and April 19th (ARIES) — Throughout the morning and until 12:14 p. m. should be a happy period, when affairs should go smoothly and your self-assurance be bolstered up. Good period for following up your plans with courage and confidence. The remainder of the day and evening is filled with influences that tend to bring mental tension and excitement. Avoid snap judgments, haste in travel and what commitments you make.

April 20th and May 20th (TAURUS) — Today will likely be a day of unusual surprises. Things you thought were impossible are likely to materialize. Plans started today should meet with notable success. Conferences and meetings should encounter splendid results. New ideas are likely to have the support of unusual people and unexpected avenues will open up for action.

May 21st and June 20th (GEMINI) — The entire day favors meeting old friends, for obtaining the co-operation of others, for mingling socially, for making contacts and for advancing personal interests. The culminating influences today bring about cordial relations and a great deal of the news you receive today will be pleasant.

June 21st and July 22nd (CANCER) — The most stable part of the day appears to be before 3:30 p. m. Throughout the remainder of the day and evening, you may encounter uncertainties, underhandness and have a feeling of high tension and nervousness. Be cautious in travel.

July 23rd and August 22nd (LEO) — The entire day favors the usual Sunday interest. After 5:24 p. m. and continuing throughout the evening is excellent for friendly contacts.

August 23rd and September 22nd (VIRGO) — Make yourself relax during the hours previous to 11:21 a. m. for you will likely feel a strong desire towards activity that is not well-directed. After 11:21 a. m. you can make steady progress in responsible undertakings, such as affairs with a steady foundation, and are not termed frivolous.

September 23rd and October 22nd (LIBRA) — Gain and pleasure may be derived during the entire day and evening through affairs that are sentimental, artistic and beautiful. You should be able to encounter much good will in your dealings all day, for this is a favorable time for religious, home, social and conservative affairs.

October 23rd and November 21st (SCORPIO) — News, conversations, sermons and travel will bring much cheer and happiness before 2:14 p. m. After 2:14 p. m. he especially cautious as to travel and around liquids.

November 22nd and December 21st (SAGITTARIUS) — There is likely to be too heavy a strain, too much astuteness, to come to agreements before 12:43 p. m. An excellent time to be careful of your tongue, or it may be that someone will use these qualities against you.

Between 12:43 p. m. and 6:44 p. m. will be surprisingly different from the morning, for at this time you can attain a sympathy and peace that should be most beneficial to your undertakings.

December 22nd and January 19th (CAPRICORN) — The entire day and evening should be filled with cheerfulness and confidence, enabling you to progress agreeably and the Sunday morning services should fill you with genuine spirituality.

January 20th and February 18th (AQUARIUS) — An excellent day to attain constructive and worthwhile results. A good day for usual Sunday activities.

February 19th and March 20th (PISCES) — Previous to 1:50 p. m. is a favorable period for communications, writing, studying and especially auspicious for attending Sunday religious services. Be cautious in attempting new beginnings, as you are likely to run into too much confusion to obtain satisfactory results.

CAT FINALLY RETURNS.

When bounced out of church after he had followed the family to Sunday morning service, Dude, 13-year-old Angora cat belonging to Mr. and Mrs. Robert Bucher, of Huntington, Ind., disappeared. After a three-year absence, Dude returned home, apparently ready to forgive and forget.

AUTO OF 1908 DRIVEN.

The 710th flivver made by Henry Ford still is going strong. Built in 1908, the car is driven daily by Richard Gordon, of Rockland, Me. It has carbide gas headlights with kerosene lamps as auxiliaries, a coilbox and carburetor adjustment on the dashboard.

Shipp Reviews Film Year: Newcomers Win Honors

By CAMERON SHIPP.
Constitution Hollywood Writer.
HOLLYWOOD, Dec. 28.—This department is now shopping for embossed swimming pools, diamond-studded smoking glasses, brass-encrusted personal press agents and other trinkets to award in our first annual prize list entitled Onward and Upward With the Arts, or, Toward Bigger and Better Things With the Best Minds in Hollywood.

Culling the exciting events and personalities of 1940, we have selected the following candidates, and herewith throw open the floor for nominations:

1. Miss Ann Sheridan provided national entertainment by kicking Harvard University for a field goal after Georgia Tech came to the rescue by getting herself handcuffed to a freshman, and by kissing George Brent for a record.

2. Mayor LaGuardia made a brave attempt to move Hollywood to Broadway; all of Broadway that had far fare moved to Hollywood.

3. Orson Welles arrived in Hollywood to produce pictures. Production record so far: one heard.

4. Martin Dies investigated Hollywood. He discovered that $5,000 a week actors are seldom Communists.

5. John Barrymore capitalized the decayed facade of a once noble theatrical structure and placed his profile in the cement of Grauman's Chinese theater alongside of Clark Gable's feet.

6. Salmon-colored Christmas trees appeared on Hollywood boulevard late in November.

7. Dorothy Lamour decided to burn her sarong as a publicity stunt. She discovered what collegiate America already knew: that the sarong was non-inflammable.

8. The most entertaining sight in Hollywood continues to be an enormous animated washer-woman on a signboard. As she washes, her skirts go up.

9. "Prince" Mike Romanoff and Barbara Hutton were leaders of Hollywood society until Elsa Maxwell moved in. She made a motion picture with Slapsie Maxie Rosenbloom.

10. A glamor publicity treatment was given to Elsie, the Borden Cow. Elsie was guest of honor at a luncheon at the Ambassador hotel. She has since become a mother.

Picks "The Letter."

Performing as a motion picture critic during a turn on a certain newspaper, your correspondent attempted to pick the 10 best pictures of the year. I was last in a poll of readers last in a national poll of critics. Various polls have been taken in Hollywood, and they vary just as widely as they do anywhere else. So far as I can observe, only two pictures are unanimously on every list prepared by players and professional movie-makers. They are "The Letter," with Bette Davis, and "The Long Voyage Home."

The town is virtually unanimous in naming new people for 1940 honors. Preston Sturges, after eight years of scribbling, turned out "The Great McGinty," and has made two more hits as writer-director to win the Hollywood accolade. Curtis Bernhardt, directing his first two pictures, "My Love Came Back" and "Lady With Red Hair," is a marked man. Ginger Rogers proved she could act, as well as dance with Fred Astaire, in "Primrose Path," and "Kitty Foyle." Alfred Hitchcock moved over from England to show Hollywood new tricks in suspense.

Dooly County, Ga. Vincent Sherman, a Dooly county, Georgia, boy, is being lionized for his terse and excellent direction of "Flight From Destiny," starring Thomas Mitchell.

Top-rankers among the new players who blossomed out during the past year are James Stephenson, who made his hit in "The Letter"; Joan Fontaine, Joan Leslie, Arthur Kennedy, Dennis Morgan, Ronald Reagan and William T. Orr.

Warner Brothers' Christmas gift to the fans is Vitasecond, which will make music easier on the ears in theaters equipped with it. Disney gave us "Pinocchio," and the best of the world premieres was "Santa Fe." Chaplin made "The Great Dictator," and admitted he was married to Paulette Goddard.

We still have double fea-

BACK FROM EUROPE—These girls have danced in most of the principal cities of Europe, but because of "unsettled conditions" are back home. They open a five-day engagement Tuesday at the Capitol theater in the new unit, "Studio Scandals."

Rialto Holds 'Arizona'; Cast Large

"Arizona," which opened at the Rialto theater Christmas Day, is already being acclaimed all over the city as one of the finest pieces of entertainment the screen has given us this year. Capacity houses have been the rule since the opening performances and there is every indication this picture will challenge the records set by previous Columbia productions of the same quality.

Jean Arthur is the star of Arizona, with William Holden in the masculine lead. Warren William and Porter Hall head the supporting cast.

It is a story of the days, during the War Between the States, before Arizona became a state. It was one of the wildest areas the nation has ever known, in those days, and the story of a lone girl who battles for her rights, single-handed in a world of men, is a true thriller.

The outdoor scenes of this picture are literally superb. Wesley Ruggles was the director, outdoing even his famous earlier success "Cimarron."

Hitler Ran 'Em From Europe, 'Lucky Girls' at Capitol

Marking their first visit to the south, the Six Lucky Girls, internationally famous dancing unit, will appear in "Studio Scandals," the new vodvil unit "opening Tuesday at the Capitol theater for five days. This unit will appear for only five days because starting Sunday, January 5, the Capitol will present each stage show for a period of seven days with a Sunday opening.

But to get back to The Lucky Girls. What makes them so different from other line girls? Well, in the first place, they have danced as a unit in every important city in Europe, almost. They passed over Oslo and a few other places which Hitler occupied before their arrival, but prior to the war the girls had really traveled most of Europe and were featured in the leading cabarets and night clubs in many European capitals. In addition to The Lucky Girls, "Studio Scandals" will bring an aggregation of variety entertainment consisting of name acts. The Three Youman Brothers, Major Bowes' discoveries, will hold sway. These three talented musicians imitate to perfection every big name band on radio today. Other acts will be The Three Lymbettes, unusual acrobatic routines; The Six Cordovas, teeterboard performers; the Two Radio Jesters, imitating radio and Hollywood personalities; Edison and Louise, the funny couple.

On the screen, the Capitol will offer "Meet the Wildcat," an action mystery production starring Ralph Bellamy and Margaret Lindsay.

Fred's Songs Fly High

Fred Astaire is the western half of what probably constitutes Tin Pan Alley's only cross-country song-writing team.

While working on "Second Chorus," the sprightly comedy co-starring Paulette Goddard, which opens Wednesday at the Paramount theater, the song-writing dancer completed the music for a new composition called "Sweet Sorrow," recorded it on a platter and then air mailed it to his New York collaborator, Lyricist Gladys Shelley. After writing the words for the music sent her on the disc, Miss Shelley sent them air mail to Astaire. The hit tune, "Like Taking Candy From a Baby," is a product of their teamwork.

"I think we're the only song writing team in existence that works in this way," opines Astaire. "Anyway, it may provide an answer to the age-old question, which do we think of first—the words or the music."

"Second Choice," produced by Burrus Morris, former Atlantan, is also the midnight show at the Fox New Year's Eve, moving to the Paramount the next day.

Life With Flynn, Curtiz Is All Bruises—Olivia

By OLIVIA DE HAVILLAND.

Whew!

I've just gone over Niagara Falls in a barrel, crashed through a brick wall in an army tank, plunged into a mountain peak in a stratosphere going 300 miles an hour and been run over by the Notre Dame football team plus the rooting section.

I've just finished my seventh picture with Michael Curtiz as director.

I shouldn't want that to happen even to my worst enemy. That's how I feel right now. Next week, when the swelling has been reduced, the bruises are less painful, and this headache and these spots before my eyes have gone, I'll feel better. I'll probably be right back at work for Mike again.

He and I, and Errol Flynn, seem to have been destined for each other. To work together in the same pictures, I mean. Right from the time we made "Captain Blood," which was Errol's first big part, and the first of the swash-buckling action melodramas that have brought Mike fame. My, my, "Captain Blood." That was way back in 1935. It seemed 15 years ago.

You may have gathered that Mike Curtiz is no ordinary man and no ordinary director. You have gathered right. Mike directs with his fists where other directors wear silken gloves. His energy is appalling and he has no regard for time. He never eats lunch and begrudges the time others take to eat it. We had our most interesting exchange of words during filming of "Santa Fe Trail," our latest picture, one night when it was necessary for me to change wardrobe and hair dress for a new sequence. I had to be driven 20 miles into the studio from location, and back again, plus time out for the change, before I could return to the set. Mike howled. I screamed back at him.

That night we worked until 2 o'clock the next morning after having had a 7:30 a. m. call the day before. About 17 hours of work, in all. And many other days during the production of "Santa Fe Trail," it was the very same thing. The film opens Wednesday at the Fox theater.

That was my reason for writing this. For just the other day some studio visitor, a woman, said to me, "Miss de Havilland, I envy you. You successful screen actresses certainly have easy lives." Easy lives? Humph.

ACTION—James Newill as a state trooper in "Sky Bandit," playing today and tomorrow at the Cameo theater.

Song Team Created For Roxy Film

A new song-writing team, bringing together two of the best known names in the field of popular music, was created to do the songs for "Young People," the new 20th Century-Fox picture which is now showing at the Roxy theater, starring Shirley Temple, Jack Oakie and Charlotte Greenwood.

The new team is Mack Gordon and Harry Warren. Gordon is famed as the lyricist of Shirley's greatest hits—among them, "When I'm With You," "You've Got to Eat Your Spinach, Baby," and "Oh My Goodness."

Gordon formerly was teamed with Harry Revel, while Warren was a partner in the team of Warren-Dubin. Together, the two evolved five new hits for "Young People."

"Fifth Avenue," "I Wouldn't Take a Million," "Tra-la-la-la," "The Mason-Dixon Line," "Young People."

'Strike Up Band' Held at Plaza

Mirth and melody reign for another week at the Plaza theater, when Mickey Rooney, Judy Garland and a group of clever youngsters, many of them seen with the youthful stars in "Babes in Arms," are pleasing audiences with harmonies and comicalities in "Strike Up the Band."

Mickey and Judy organize a high school band in the story and that's where things begin to happen. Paul Whiteman has announced a radio contest for high school bands. They set out to raise funds for the trip to Chicago. They stage a travesty on old-time melodrama, with the buzz saw, the heroine tied to the railroad tracks, and such ancient ditties as "Heaven Will Protect a Working Girl."

The climax is centered on Gershwin's "Strike Up the Band."

Mounties Ride Air at Cameo

Renfrew of the Royal Mounted rides the air in the action drama "Sky Bandits," which will run tomorrow and Tuesday at the Cameo theater for the first time in Atlanta.

Renfrew, played by James Newill, takes to the air to trap a gang of plane wreckers, who use a mysterious "death ray" to bring down ships carrying gold. The other picture to be shown is a musical comedy called "Laugh It Off," with Johnny Downs, Constance Moore and Majorie Rambeau.

GABLE VS. LAMARR—The fighting starts when Clark Gable (foreign correspondent in Moscow), starts to leave Hedy Lamarr (a Russian lady motorman), on their wedding night in "Comrade X," which opens Tuesday at Loew's Grand theater.

BELOW THE BELT—The lady motorman is fancy on the footwork and leads with a swift kick that seems to take Gable by surprise. The reason is that she doesn't want him to take her to America—at least, not against her will.

IN THE CLINCH—Clark Gable (McKinley Thompson), is forced to take steps with Miss Lamarr (Theodore), and he presses his advantage with a tight squeeze. You wouldn't think it, but this was supposed to be their wedding night.

"SHUT UP, YOU MULE"—These are hard words, coming from a new hubby. It looks like a complete victory for Gable, who has Lamarr down and is tying her up. But watch that footwork, Mr. Gable. This is a forecast of things to come.

HE'S UP, HE'S DOWN—The lady has the last word, or rather the last kick, as she catches Gable in the stomach and he goes down groggily for a long count. "Comrade X" is a new M.-G.-M. release, directed by King Vidor. At least, he had her in his arms.

Dramas Best Films of '40; Comedies 2d; Music Last

By JUBBARD KEAVY.
HOLLYWOOD, Dec. 28.—(AP)—For movie entertainment in 1940, Hollywood liked drama best. Comedy ran a close second. Adventure and biographical stories tied for third place and musicals also ran.

This is a conclusion based on a review of this year's films Hollywood considered outstanding, movies distinguished enough in some way to be remembered out of the maze of 500-odd that appeared.

The dramas liked best by the people who make movies included "Rebecca," "The Grapes of Wrath," "Our Town," "Susan and God," "All This and Heaven, Too," "The Letter," "Kitty Foyle," "The Primrose Path" and "Philadelphia Story."

Three of the "best" comedies had to do with marital relations: "My Favorite Wife," "I Love You Again" and "This Thing Called Love." One was Disney's "Pinocchio" and another was the star-studded "Boo Town." Two were satires of political systems: "The Great McGinty" and "The Great Dictator."

Adventure films which stood out were "Northwest Passage," "Foreign Correspondent," "The Long Voyage Home" and "The Mark of Zorro."

Musicals' opinion of the biographical subjects coincided with the public's, with one exception: Here we liked the beautifully done "Abe Lincoln in Illinois." The others were "Dr. Ehrlich's Magic Bullet," "Young Tom Edison," and "Edison, the Man."

This was not a musical year. Only three musical films made the grade in Hollywood. Two of them, "It's a Date" and "Spring Parade," starred the amazing Deanna Durbin. The third was the always successful "Irene."

Shakespeare for Broadway; Lewis and Levant Sponsors

By MARK BARRON
Associated Press Drama Editor.
NEW YORK.

Not since the New York Theater Guild began its courageous career in 1919 has a playhouse group started with so many ideals as the Studio theater, which made its bow to Christmas season Broadway audiences with one of the best, but most difficult to act of all Shakespearean plays—"King Lear."

The guild started with an abundance of ideals and about $19 in cash and a play which was a failure. After that they found some hit dramas and several star players like Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontanne and since then it has been good times.

Imposing Sponsors.
The comparison is made here because the Studio theater, under the direction of Erwin Piscator, has as imposing a group of sponsors as the guild had at its beginning.

Sinclair Lewis, Oscar Levant, Robert E. Sherwood, Paul Muni, George S. Kaufman, Eddie Dowling and Clifton Fadiman are among the names advising Piscator in this new theater group. And there is ample explanation of why they are doing this. Piscator was the distinguished director of the Volksbuehne, an anti-Nazi theater in his native Germany. Before he was forced to leave his native country he directed the famous "The Good Soldier Schweik."

His production of "King Lear" is unfortunately overrun with actors and actresses who are trying too much to make a modern commentary upon this play of 1605 such as Orson Welles did when he made a commentary upon the Italian Fascists in "Julius Caesar."

Welles made his editorial comment outright so that one knew where the late Mr. Shakespeare ended and where the ever present Mr. Welles began. But, this Piscator production of "King Lear" merely suggests that it may be parallel to things happening in this present day world.

Little Scenery.
Piscator does his production with practically no scenery. There is a turntable with some futuristic angles on the rocks and caves where Lear has retreated in his mad state, and some banners and lights that announce changes of scenes. But, it only shows that Shakespeare still needs pomp and scenery in the background for a modern day audience.

Sam Jaffe, as King Lear, is not exactly the actor for such a great Shakespearean role, but he speaks his lines with the authority of a willing workman.

Jaffe, who made his first hit on Broadway as Kringlein in "Grand Hotel" 10 years ago, has some parallel moments of that role in his present one as Lear.

As King Lear he denounces the elements, scorns the storms and rains. And with his defiant "blow winds and crack your cheeks" speech in this play he still recalls his performances in "Grand Hotel," when he gave a more modern and softer version.

Kringlein: "Caviar and champagne may mean nothing to you, but to me they mean a great deal. You see sir, I am ill and all of a sudden I got a fear, such a fear, of missing life."

Jaffe, a fine actor, is miscast in the role, and of the other actors there are some good, some bad, but few distinguished.

Kate Hepburn To Play Here Jan. 24-25

The Theater Guild's production of Philip Barry's "The Philadelphia Story," with Katharine Hepburn, now on a cross-country tour, will play January 24 and 25 at the Erlanger theater.

Miss Hepburn and the original Theater Guild cast will present the drama here in person.

Though Katharine Hepburn's personality and velvet performances are the intriguing center of interest as the curtain rises on "The Philadelphia Story," so amusingly witty are Barry's dialogue and humorous his gay chaff with the Seth Lord family, who live on the Main Line out of the Broad street station in Philadelphia, that all of the highly individual characters help to round out a merry evening in the theater.

Miss Hepburn's role is that of a young divorcee who has her home invaded by a hard-boiled magazine writer and a candid camera fiend bent on getting the facts of the social life of the Main Line. Her relations to three men become involved and each of them brings home to her some feminine truths.

The seat sale will open at the theater box office Monday morning, January 20, at 10 o'clock, but mail orders are accepted now.

ON STAGE—Shown are Katharine Hepburn and Van Heflin in a scene from Philip Barry's gay comedy, "The Philadelphia Story," which plays at the Erlanger theater, January 24 and 25. Hepburn plays a spirited daughter of a staid old Philadelphia family.

THE AIR CADETS

A Part for All Schools

In the Defense Program

By CAROLYN MATTHEWS.

WHAT part can the schools take in the aviation-defense program? Not only colleges, secondary schools and vocational schools, but the elementary schools as well—the junior high and high school divisions?

This interesting subject is discussed at length by United States Commissioner of Education John Studebaker, in a recent article. Mr. Studebaker points out that if we have learned any military lesson at all from the present European war, it is that air power in modern military defense is of crucial importance.

For the goal of 50,000 military planes, which not only have to be designed, constructed, powered, and equipped, but also flown and serviced as well, it was estimated as early as last December that the aircraft industry would require an increased labor force of approximately 100,000 workmen to meet the needs of this enlarged program. "Since that time," he says, "the expansion in aircraft construction industry has been greatly accelerated and the problem of securing trained workmen greatly increased."

Aside from the contributions of vocational and technical schools and colleges to aviation and the skilled aircraft workers they have trained, let's look at the possibilities in the general field of education:

"The schools of the nation are in a position to promote air-mindedness," says Mr. Studebaker, "for about one-fourth of the people in this country attend schools and colleges regularly and are under immediate direction of paid teachers. The amazing development of aviation in this country during the last twenty years has captured the interest of youth, and on this account aviation has to some extent found its way into the curricula of the public schools."

Nevertheless, education has not heretofore kept pace with the rapid progress in this field. Despite a keen interest among many high school pupils and college students, only 130 high schools and 109 colleges and universities were reported as offering aviation courses in 1938. Total enrollments that year in aviation courses in all secondary schools when added to enrollments in aviation clubs totaled 34,000 students, less than 0.5 of 1 per cent of the total enrollment in these schools."

YOUTH'S TRAINING IN DICTATOR COURSES

Studebaker compares the seeming indifference of our schools with what has been happening in certain dictator nations. "Germany, Russia and Italy early initiated programs in the schools designed not only to make youth air-minded but also generally to develop the elementary knowledges and skills which would provide a reservoir upon which to draw for the training of pilots and aircraft mechanics for military purposes."

In Germany, every school, starting with the primary schools, was required to have at least one teacher qualified in aviation. The government published for these teachers a weekly bulletin which contained the latest information on aviation advances in order that the schools might keep Germany's youth informed on current developments. Between the ages of 10 and 16 most German boys were engaged in building models and flying them. From this, older youth moved on to the building and operation of gliders, and then to actual flight training. Italy also developed a thoroughgoing program in the public schools similar to that of Germany which resulted in the training of thousands of selected youth in various phases of aeronautics.

Commissioner Studebaker doesn't believe in imitating the dictator nations' tactics, yet he wants this necessary air-mindedness developed as it should be among the population, and the best way of doing this, according to his way of thinking, is to stimulate aviation in the schools far more than it is being done. "It is painfully evident," he writes, "that schools generally have been slow to capitalize upon the interest of youth for life in the modern world."

Just now, in the later elementary and junior high school grades, aviation finds its way into the curriculum in two ways:

1. Through incidental reading and discussion of topics relating to air transportation in social-study courses, to principles of flight in general science courses, and to occupational opportunities in aviation in vocational civics courses.

2. In aviation clubs, most popular and extensive of the activities of elementary and junior high schools having to do with aviation, students engage in the building and flying of model aircraft and discuss such topics as types of modern airplanes and engines, air transportation routes, and the history and progress of aviation.

"In senior high schools, teachers sometimes use problems from the field of aviation to illustrate science work and mathematics. Aviation is sometimes used to interest pupils in astronomy, history, geography, physics, mechanics, or electricity. In many high school courses aviation has been developed as an organized unit or phase of one or another of these subjects. Industrial arts courses frequently encourage some study of aviation in connection with the construction of model aircraft in school shops."

YOUR QUESTIONS ANSWERED

Q. How is postage of foreign mails adjusted? Does the U. S. government pay foreign countries for delivering mail from the United States to them?

A. On September 15, 1874, at a postal conference in Bern, Switzerland, 22 countries were represented and the first international postal convention was signed, which has remained in force to the present time, with comparatively little modification. The most striking principle of the Union is that, for the purpose of postal communication, member countries form one single postal territory. Every member of the Union binds itself to transmit the mails entrusted to it by the best means of communication which it employs for its own letters. Each member country is supposed to have the full and unrestricted use of the postal services of the whole world.

Q. Were Napoleon Bonaparte and Adolf Hitler both born in August?

A. No; Bonaparte was born August 15, 1769; Hitler, April 20, 1889.

Q. Can President Roosevelt make a secret treaty with Great Britain?

A. No; Bonaparte was born August 15, 1769; Hitler, April 20, 1889.

A. No. Article II, section 2, paragraph 2 of the Constitution reads as follows: "He (the President) shall have power, by and with the advice of the senate to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the senators present shall concur."

Q. How would the stars?

A. Their age is mere guesswork and theory. One theory is that the stars are as old as time itself.

Q. Can snakes strike when they are not coiled?

A. Observation has shown that when irritated, most poisonous snakes can strike from almost any position for short distances.

The western diamond-back rattler, when excited, frequently raises its head and the S-shaped loop 10 to 15 inches above the ground, from which position it strikes sideways and downward.

Q. What is a "right-of-way" engineer?

A. A civil engineer who determines the best right-of-way for the extension of power transmission lines or communication lines, based on construction costs, availability, and cost of property to be acquired.

Q. When did Great Britain begin to expand her empire into Africa?

A. With the taking over by purchase from the natives of Sierra Leone in West Africa in 1787.

Q. Why was the old Madison Square Garden in New York City demolished?

A. To make room for the New York Life Insurance building.

Q. When was flogging discontinued in the U. S. Army and Navy?

A. In the Navy and on merchant vessels, flogging was discontinued in 1850. In the Army, it was abolished in 1861.

CHARLES Goodyear, discoverer of the process of vulcanizing rubber, born at New Haven, Conn. He devoted 10 years to the search for a method to make rubber lose its adhesive qualities and retain shape in all temperatures. He finally stumbled on the process by sheer accident. In 1839 he was working with a mixture of rubber and sulphur and happened to drop some on a hot stove. He was amazed to find that the sticky problem had been solved. Goodyear obtained his first patent on the process in 1844, but he had to fight numerous infringements in the courts, and his decisive victory did not come until 1852. He died in New York City, July 1, 1860.

So-called "Gadsden treaty" with Mexico, under which the United States acquired 45,335 square miles of land in what is now New Mexico and Arizona, signed at Mexico City. It was negotiated with Santa Anna, Mexican president, by James Gadsden, then United States minister to Mexico. The United States paid $10,000,000 for the land and certain privileges on Mexican territory. The strip was desired so that a proposed southern railroad to the coast might have an easy grade. As a result of the transaction, Santa Anna was banished as a traitor.

Small American force under Benedict Arnold and Richard Montgomery assaulted British garrison at Quebec, but the attack failed. General Montgomery was killed early in the battle. The American leaders had hoped that the Canadians would join in the revolt, but they sided with England. Arnold and the survivors of the attack were forced to retreat, but they withdrew slowly, thus preventing the British from making a sudden march south into the colonies. Montgomery's body was buried with military honors at the Quebec garrison.

ALL-AMERICA WAR GARDENS

By W. ELBRIDGE FREEBORN.

It is with pleasure that we turn our column this week to the All-America committee for the report of the 1941 vegetable selections.

Not since the previous World War has America awakened to the family need and national economy of a big home garden. Fresh vegetables are only fresh out of one's own garden—or a neighbor's. Their sugar content begins immediately on being picked, to turn to tasteless starch. Hence, vegetables should be vine ripened and gathered just in time for preparation of the meal. In no other way can one have or relish the full value of really fresh vegetables. And, what a waste of a difference in the taste.

The family saving may be deflated if we think of city or town gardens and consider our investment and labor, or when we hire labor to break the land, or cultivate the garden. On the farm, a mule or tractor is handy. Cultivators may be used. Manure should be available. There is no valid excuse not to have a big garden, with perhaps some extra vegetables to market, along with surplus eggs, chickens and butter. There, it is very economical and the garden plot is the most valuable piece of ground on the entire place. Constant farm living out of store-bought tin cans is a disgrace.

Considering gardening as needed exercise and recreation, which generally cost money for town folks, the town garden may well pay its way. I'm glad I didn't have to pay for that last bushel of green tomatoes I pulled by flashlight the night of our first October freeze. They ripened as fast as my family would eat them. Yes, they were 1940 All-America "Minigolds," grown from transplanted seed, and a few left from early-planted Marglores. We like to slice red and gold tomatoes together because they make a more appetizing dish as well as an attraction to the table.

Getting back to our subject, however, we can save money and marketing, with a well-planted garden. Not only for ourselves, but we relieve the industries, transportation systems, much needed tinplate for our military program, and the time and labor of others who may be needed in building up our national preparedness.

Anyway, this is a big garden year, and we want to plant the finest, most prolific and luscious vegetables that we can get. The newest improvements are worthy of all attention and All-America selections for 1941 bring us a variety to please. They have, with dozens of other entries, been tried out in the 12 official vegetable trial grounds, covering different climatic sections of America and southern Canada. Chosen as the most meritorious, and better than others of their kinds already available, we may expect them to add greatly to our gardens this year.

Seeds should be conveniently obtained from up-to-date seedsmen. Call for them by name, the new All-Americas, and insist on getting them. This is emphasized especially with the new vegetables because some seed dealers simply try to alarm to wake them up. All seedsmen have the opportunity to get originators' stocks this first year of introduction, and of course the leading stores and mail order seedsmen will have them.

Medal Winners. Perhaps because of varied weather conditions in 1940, some judges reporting hot, dry weather, others excessive rain and cold, late spring, etc., scores or voting points were held down. No 1941 vegetable introduction received enough points for a silver medal, and there hasn't been a gold medal awarded since the 1934 trials. Nevertheless, this year's winners gave good account of themselves in spite of the trying season and strict judging. They are highly recommended.

A couple of judges reported that it put on a crop when other varieties failed, and another reported it a very heavy bearer under adverse conditions.

MULCHING: Roses, perennials and shrubs should be mulched with a mixture of one bale peatmoss, one bag sheep manure, one large wheelbarrow woods earth.

SPRAYING: Get a spray guide then properly, regularly and thoroughly spray fruit trees. Thin lime sulphur, spray roses now. Do not delay this as after the first leaf appears lime sulphur should not be used again.

PRUNING: Prune summer-flowering shrubs. Do not prune spring-flowering shrubs. Remove tall stems from roses but wait until early March for final pruning. Do not prune scuppernon now—it's too late.

SURGICAL OPERATION WITH THE USE OF AN ANESTHETIC was performed upon Adam, Genesis 2:21—"And the Lord God caused a deep sleep to fall upon Adam, and he slept; and he took one of his ribs, and closed up the flesh instead thereof."

RAISINS AND APPLES ARE PRESCRIBED FOR THE LOVE-SICK in the Song of Solomon 2:5—"Stay me with flagons, comfort me with apples: for I am sick of love" is the American Standard Revised Version. "Stay ye with raisins, refresh ye with apples; for I am sick from love." If raisins were supposed to be a cure for the love-sick, they apparently did not work very well in David's case.

HOUSING FACILITIES... EACH OF THESE BARRACKS WILL HOUSE 63 MEN—AND HAVE AN OFFICE, CLOSET, BATH, KITCHEN, AND DAY ROOM.

Each section of barracks will have its fire station, containing up-to-date fire equipment and constantly manned by a crew of soldier-firemen under an experienced commander. Fire signal systems often include a siren which is audible in all parts of the military reservation. Guards are maintained over ammunition stores, mostly located in isolated spots, and over warehouses containing inflammable material. Every effort is made to prevent the collection of piles of rubbish from which fires might easily spread.

Barracks are furnished with an ample supply of metal containers for depositing cigarette stumps, matches and so forth. Rules regulating smoking as a fire preventative are strictly enforced. Barracks orderlies—men in charge of soldiers' sleeping quarters—are especially charged with maintaining vigilance against signs of fire. Fire drills will be held frequently and at unannounced times in order to keep military personnel on the alert, both for the safeguarding of lives and the protection of property. Fire extinguishers of the latest type are installed in all barracks and it is the duty of unit commanders to make certain that all men are taught to operate these implements quickly and effectively.

Tomorrow: Will the Draftee Get Back His Job After His Service?

Such means garden satisfaction with such a fine novelty in a really sweet pepper there's no wonder that it is the top bronze medal winner.

YANKEE HYBRID SQUASH looks about the same as the previous winners, Early Prolific Straightneck. But, it averaged a week earlier and was even more productive. It has superior, hybrid vigor, uniformity of yellow fruit and heavy bearing, trials also showing three to 10 days' earlier fruiting than other varieties. This was developed at the Connecticut Experiment Station; suitable for both home and commercial use. Bronze medal.

VICTOR TOMATO was raised at Michigan State College from a cross between Alfred and Break O'Day. It gives us a vigorous, compact plant, allowing closer planting than standard varieties. It is extra early, even-ripening, uniform scarlet coloring over the whole fruit, has smooth skin and is self-pruning. It completely bears fruiting rather early, so is for early home and early market use. Comparing with Earliana, it was almost as early, smoother and without the cracks. Bronze medal.

ALLEGHENY HYBRID SWEET CORN is the new medium late variety of medium yellow color and with 18 to 22 rows of deep, very narrow grains. The plant is tall, vigorous, dark green and a prolific bearer of large ears. More noteworthy is the high percentage of marketable, cylindrical ears, and trials showed very little ear-wood damage. As with other hybrid corns, this should be tried for adaptability to your own locality before planting heavily for market crops. Try it this year in the garden. Bronze medal.

WHAT TO PLANT IN JANUARY. PLANTS: Set out roses, shrubs, trees, perennials. BULBS: Plant Japanese lilies and lilies of the valley. FRUITS AND BERRIES: Plant immediately—also nuts. VEGETABLES: Sow lettuce, cabbage and onion seed in the cold frame. English peas, asparagus and rhubarb in the open.

To Relieve Bad Cough In a Hurry, Mix This at Home

Swift Acting, and Saves Big Money. Easily Mixed. You'll be surprised how quickly and easily you can relieve coughs due to colds, when you try this splendid recipe. It gives you about four times as much cough medicine for your money, and you'll find it truly wonderful, for real relief.

Make a syrup by stirring 2 cups of granulated sugar and one cup of water into a mixture, until dissolved. No cooking needed—it's no trouble at all. Then put 2 1/2 ounces of Pinex (obtained from any drugist) into a pint bottle. Add your syrup and you have a full pint of medicine that will amaze you by its quick action. It never spoils, lasts a family a long time, and tastes fine—children love it.

This simple mixture takes right hold of a cough. For real results, you've never seen anything better. It loosens the phlegm, soothes the irritated membranes, and quickly eases soreness and difficult breathing.

Pinex is a compound containing Norway Pine and palatable guarana, in concentrated form, well-known for its prompt action in coughs and bronchial irritations. Money refunded if it doesn't please you in every way. Adv.

Full Speed Ahead

By WILLIAM G. KEY.

Fat and sassy is the word for 1941.
The gears of industry will be a gleaming whirl of steel, fed in endless streams with the products of the soil, of the mines and of the sea. To feed and clothe the workers of this industry an even greater business must be built, in agriculture, in cattle-raising, in retail stores, and in the vast task of distribution. Once rusting rails will shine anew under the smooth flow of myriad trains. The accent will be upon defense, but the work will be that of the man-in-the-street. And his accent will be a buying one, an accent on the good things of life.
America's task is a proud one—to get the wheels rolling; to keep this youngster fat and sassy.

Photographs by Kenneth Rogers.

An estimated 1,200 persons once lived here in Pueblo Bonito, nestling at the base of New Mexico's sheer sandstone cliffs. These are the largest of the ruins which make up the Chaco Canyon National Monument in the northwestern part of the state. Some of the walls, built between 919 and 1130 A. D., are still standing as high as the fourth story.

Prehistoric Indian tribes of New Mexico had no written language, even though they reached a high stage of civilization. But on their walls they left undecipherable symbols, such as those along the wall of this pueblo room.

Our advertisement which is carried on this page of the Rotogravure section each Sunday will be found today on the back page.

Where the mesa meets the sand. This is a scene in the White Sands National Monument in New Mexico, where vegetation attempts vainly to keep its head above the sands—almost pure gypsum.

Six hundred million years ago this "Rock of Ages" had its beginning in the Carlsbad Caverns of New Mexico, now a national park.

The Mission of San Miguel de Santa Fe is the oldest in the United States, and was founded by Fr. Benavides in 1621 on the site of what is now Santa Fe. During the Indian rebellion of 1680, the mission was burned and partially destroyed. Rebuilt by de Vargas in 1692, the mission has been in constant use since.

(Below)
The mission church of San Antonio de Isleta. The mission was built between 1621 and 1630. Note the solid, fort-like construction of the mission, only too necessary during many of its early years.

Almost as primitive as many of New Mexico is this metal stream. A prospector here metal that opened up the the pueblos and missions of extracting gold from panning for the precious st to a new civilization.

Not far from the White Sands (above) are rolling wooded hills and brisk streams. The fisherman seems unconcerned about the intrusion of a sightseeing party from a dude ranch. This is the Pecos river, famed in song and legend.

The solid construction of pueblo ruins is well shown here. The massive walls supported structures three and four or more stories high. These were abandoned almost a thousand years ago, but traces of the ancient civilization still remain, monuments to their builders.

This is one of the kivas, or ceremonial chambers, of the Aztec ruins, now being restored by the National Park Service. There were 52 kivas and 500 rooms in this great communal dwelling built more than 800 years ago by the first great Americans. The dwellings were built by workers using only stone implements.

Soft music and a southern moon are needed to complete this picture. The model wears a flowered taffeta with a low-cut, molded bodice. There are full gatherings to give that hoop-skirt effect.

In this hooded beauty for the waterfront, navy blue braid worked in rococo scrolls distinguishes the neckline and hood. The cape, for winter resort wear, is of white cotton terry cloth.

Equally at home on a penthouse terrace or on a sandy beach are these loose, full-trousered pajamas. On the collar of the crisp white crepe blouse is an edging of the same navy white-striped silk material used for the trousers.

Southbound fugitives from a cold northern winter will like this terry cloth double-breasted tennis coat. The shorts are tailored of English sports flannel, and a wooden ring holds the silk neckerchief.

WINIFRED WARE—

This is the time when all who can get away from offices plan trips southward. The picturesque haunts of old Mexico, Florida beaches, the Caribbean and South America will claim many visitors who will carry with them clothes as colorful as the spots they visit. Gay prints echoing Hawaiian beaches, nonchalant casuals for cruise or shore wear with the "South of the Border" influence are fashionable for Southern wear. Here in Atlanta stores you'll find a splendid collection to meet all your needs and help you to a sunny trip with clear sailing ahead.

Pennants for play. Red, white and blue pennants in the season's favorite patriotic combination flutter from this swim suit. The waist is fitted in and the background color is a brilliant blue.

Tarzan

by EDGAR RICE BURROUGHS

BRIDE OF THE FIRE GOD

TOWRIT CAST A DAGGER GLANCE AT THE NEW CAPTIVE. "YOU'VE COME TO YOUR DOOM," HE GROWLED.

"YOU TOO, ARE DOOMED," TARZAN ANSWERED. "SOON THE FIERY MOUNTAIN WILL BURST AND DESTROY YOUR CITY."

AS IF TO AFFIRM HIS WORDS, TONGUES OF FLAME FLARED FROM THE VOLCANO AND LICKED THE SKY.

PANIC SEIZED THE REVELERS, BUT TOWRIT SPOKE CALMLY: "THE FIRE GOD GROWS IMPATIENT FOR HIS BRIDE."

THE BRUTAL KING LEVELED A FINGER AT LEECIA. "TO THE CRATER WITH HER--AND TARZAN, TOO!" SO TARZAN AND LEECIA WERE PLACED AT THE HEAD OF A GREAT PROCESSION THAT MARCHED TOWARD THE VOLCANO.

THE SUN ROSE, BUT ITS RAYS WERE LOST IN THE SMOKE THAT FROWNED ACROSS THE MOUNTAIN'S BROW.

THEN AN OMINOUS RUMBLE FROM DEEP IN THE EARTH STRUCK TERROR TO THE HEARTS OF THE MARCHERS.

"FASTER! FASTER!" TOWRIT URGED. "OUR GOD MUST HAVE HIS VICTIMS QUICKLY IF HIS ANGER IS TO BE APPEASED."

NOW FROM THE MOUTH OF THE FIERY MOUNTAIN STEWED A GEYSER OF ASHES.

BUT THROUGH THE MURK THE PROCESSION PUSHED ON TO THE BRINK OF THE BOILING CRATER.

HOSARTH--
"FIRST THE GIRL!" TOWRIT SCREAMED
"TO THE REALM OF THE FIRE GOD!"

TINY TIM by -STANLEY LINK-

WHAT A MERRY CHRISTMAS THIS HAS BEEN FOR THE POOR TOIL CHILDREN - TIM NOW HAS THEM OUT ON THE POND TRYING OUT THEIR NEW SKATES -

WHEE! THIS IS FUN -

HOLD ON TIGHT! WE'RE GOING TO CRACK THE WHIP -

IT'S GETTING LATE, KIDS - I THINK WE'D BETTER BE STARTING FOR HOME -

OH, JUST ONCE MORE AROUND THE POND, TIM - PLEASE!

YES - JUST ONCE MORE -

THOSE KIDS ARE HAVING THE TIME OF THEIR LIVES - I'LL LET THEM GO AROUND ONCE MORE - THEN I'LL TAKE THEM HOME -

AH - THAT BOY OVER THERE - AND HE'S ALL ALONE -

- A PERFECT SPECIMEN - JUST THE ONE FOR MY EXPERIMENT -

SAY, BOY, COME HERE!

WHAT IS IT, MISTER?

COULD YOU TELL ME IF THIS IS THE ROAD TO HILLCREST?

I'M SORRY, SIR - I'M A STRANGER HERE -

BUT IF YOU'LL WAIT, I'LL ASK ONE OF MY FRIENDS - THEY'LL BE BACK ANY SECOND NOW -

LET ME OUT OF HERE! WHERE ARE YOU TAKING ME?

KEEP QUIET, YOU LITTLE FOOL! WE'VE GOT A LONG TRIP AHEAD OF US -

LATER -

HE SAID HE'D WAIT RIGHT HERE FOR US -

HERE'S TIM'S SKATES -

MAYBE HE WENT HOME -

MEANWHILE -

MANY MILES AWAY, HIGH UP ON A CLIFF - STANDS A WEIRD OLD CASTLE-LIKE BUILDING - THIS IS THE DESTINATION OF OUR MYSTERIOUS STRANGER -

WHO IS THIS MAN?

WHAT DID HE MEAN, WHEN HE SAID - TIM WOULD BE A PERFECT SPECIMEN FOR HIS EXPERIMENT?

SMILIN' JACK

POOR JACK - HIM CAME HOME AND FIND HIM'S BRIDE QUARANTINED WITH MEASLES!

YEAH - AND TH' BUTLER INSISTS ON ENFORCING TH' QUARANTINE - BUT JACK'S TRYING TO SLIP IN TO SEE JOY ANYWAY -

WOOF! WOOF!

YOU CAN COME DOWN NOW, JACK - TH' DOGS HAVE BEEN CALL-UM OFF!

THAT'S TH' LIMIT! SICKIN' HOUNDS ON A GUY TO ENFORCE A QUARANTINE!

IT ISN'T TH' QUARANTINE - IT'S ORDERS OF THE DUCHESS THAT ARE BEING ENFORCED!

TH' DUCHESS! WHO IN BLAZES IS THAT?

JOY'S MOTHER! IT SEEMS SHE'S JUST RETURNED FROM ONE OF HER GLOBE TROTTERING JAUNTS!

DAUGHTER, DEAR, IT'S SO NICE TO BE HOME WITH YOU AGAIN - I'VE GREAT PLANS FOR YOUR HAPPINESS!

MOTHER, I APPRECIATE YOUR COMING TO SEE ME - BUT WHY THIS SUDDEN INTEREST IN MY HAPPINESS?

WHY, JOY - YOU KNOW MOTHER HAS ALWAYS WANTED HER DAUGHTER TO BE HAPPY AND MEET PEOPLE OF SOCIAL POSITION!

YOU DIDN'T FLY ALL TH' WAY FROM RIO DE JANEIRO JUST TO TAKE MY TEMPERATURE - COME TO THE POINT!

WELL, WHEN I READ OF YOUR MARRYING THAT FORTUNE HUNTER, I KNEW IT WAS A MOTHER'S DUTY TO RETURN AN' SHOW HER DAUGHTER THE ERROR OF HER WAYS!

JACK'S NO FORTUNE HUNTER! HE WOULDN'T MARRY ME 'TIL I PROMISED WE'D LIVE ON HIS EARNINGS - JACK'S TH' FINEST MAN ALIVE - I LOVE HIM!

FATE SEPARATED US JUST AFTER OUR WEDDING - BUT I'LL BE UP IN A FEW DAYS - THEN WE'LL GO ON OUR HONEYMOON AND RETURN TO OUR OWN LITTLE COTTAGE!

A SILLY CHILDISH DREAM - YOUR HONEYMOON COTTAGE IS MERELY AN AIR-CASTLE!

WHAT DO YOU MEAN?

I'M GOING TO HAVE YOUR MARRIAGE ANNULLED!!

★ 1941 IS THE YEAR.... PAGE 2 ★

THIS IS THE YEAR

by Robert Keith Leavitt

THE earth turns. The old year sinks in blood and dust. The new one is rising in blackness. On Wednesday it will be 1941. There is a tension in the air. This is The Year. This one Tells.

Let us look at things clearly and unafraid. We are not blind. We can see how the vast, tragic game of the world is going. Those who play that game as we believe it should be played are heavily outnumbered. The year 1941 may see their downfall. Or it may see all Europe and Asia committed to the destruction of the things we stand for, and hating us for the part we have already played in upholding those things. Hating us, too, for our wealth, and greedy for our possessions. It may see half of our own hemisphere brought by economic necessity to the heel of the dictators.

The United States may be without a friend anywhere in the world able to lift a finger or even a voice for us. Upon us alone may fall the wrath — and the demands — of a dictator-ruled world.

If these things happen, democracy may die — or it may be born, again.

TO SURVIVE we must be strong — strong enough to meet any situation. We must make democracy in the United States work as it has never worked before in our lifetimes. We must make the spirit of freedom blaze as it has not blazed since the days of the Revolution.

This year will tell. And it is up to us.

Standing at the dawn of this ominous and dark New Year, let us make — each of us — a new kind of resolution, infinitely more important than any New Year's resolution we have ever considered. We must resolve that 1941 will see the end not of democracy, but of those things that sap the strength of a democratic people. For the preservation of our liberties, each one of us must make — and keep — these vows:

I RESOLVE: That to the America of 1941 I owe a pledge of all that I have, though it be life itself. I must make myself strong to support that pledge.

I RESOLVE: That there shall be an end of taking and a beginning of giving — to the nation and to our fellow men. There is no place for the "gimme" attitude toward the government, either on the part of the individual or of the organized group. America is not a feed trough; it is a great republic, created by sacrifice and bequeathed to each one of us as his personal responsibility.

I RESOLVE: To have done with self-indulgence, and with the softness and flabbiness it engenders in the mind — more, even, than in the body. We must build self-respecting self-discipline if we are to defeat the challenge of the fear-disciplined hordes of the dictators.

I RESOLVE: To make an end of ostrich-like complacency. We cannot survive by refusing to look facts squarely in the face and to think straightforwardly about them. We must recognize the lurking dangers to democracy both within and beyond our borders.

I RESOLVE: To tolerate in our public men neither obstruction from spite nor the spiteful use of power. In times like these, personal or partisan aims cannot be allowed to compete with the public interest.

I RESOLVE ABOVE ALL: To be done with cynicism, with the notion that it is smart not to believe in anything, with the sophisticated contempt for old-fashioned virtues, with the fear that it is a little ridiculous to have ideals and an abiding faith in what is right.

We cannot turn back the clock. We cannot change the things others have done or undo the things we have done ourselves. But with this New Year we can turn back for spiritual strength to the early days of America when the love of Liberty was a great and driving force in the personal lives of all of our ancestors.

People then prized freedom of thought and speech, of press and assembly, because they were threatened. They were fiercely resolved upon the right to govern themselves, because they knew that right was not a natural, unquestioned thing but one that had to be fought for and sacrificed for. They knew that all material happiness came after these things because it was founded upon them. In the generations since, we have tended to forget these truths because life has been so easy.

YET all our years have led up to this one. For this, in the dead of another winter, Americans left bloody footprints in the snows of Valley Forge. For this, later Americans perished in the opening of the West, and others at Antietam and Gettysburg. For the needs of this year, uncounted and unnoticed Americans gave their lives to science or to social service — in sheer devotion to the ideal of a better America. For this hour, young men we knew as the companions of our youth died in the staccato fury of the Argonne. All these and many millions more suffered and endured greatly that their country might be strong for a time like this.

Now it is for us to show, and show quickly, that we can recover the spiritual fire they bequeathed to us — that in the heat of that fire we can weld our material heritage into the structure of a strong, dynamic America.

Let us welcome this year, with all its challenge to us and to our way of life. Let us turn that sharp alarm to good purpose. Let it spur us to achieve the spiritual rebirth of democracy in America.

This is The Year. Let us make it Tell.

HOLD HIGH THE TORCH. Many photographs of the Statue of Liberty have been made in black and white and in color, but we think none of them has been quite so fine as the one we reproduce on THIS WEEK's cover. Elliot Clarke spent many hours of study to produce it and we are grateful to him for the result.

In the dark year ahead the Statue of Liberty will stand as a mighty symbol to all those who cherish the rights of men. As Robert Keith Leavitt says in his stirring editorial on this page, "This is The Year." It may be Freedom's hardest year. But we believe it will also be her greatest. The answer depends on the unity of all of us.

TIME UP! Have you ever heard the expression "the pin in the candle"? Recently we discovered how it began.

Years ago the wise old magistrate in a French court of domestic relations in Provence was troubled by the endless bickerings of the married couples who appeared before him. Finally he solved the problem this way:

When a protesting husband and wife appeared for trial, the judge lighted a candle with a pin stuck into the wax not far below the top. Either the husband or the wife was then permitted to talk without interruption until the flame — and the melting wax — loosened the pin. When the other's turn came the procedure was repeated. The plan was a great success, for both husband and wife, watching the flame burn away their precious time, would try to be brief and stick to the point.

EYE DETECTOR. Science has just given us another ingenious device for detecting fraud — a test in which polarized light shows instantly whether or not an eye has suffered loss of sight.

The person being tested sees an illuminated test chart through two sets of polarizing crystals. By rotating the crystals, the examiner can cut out the vision of either eye so that the subject does not know with which eye he is seeing. And that is important in case he happens to be faking an injury in one eye or the other. Recently a $50,000 claim for damaged eyesight was thrown out of court just on the mute testimony of the revolving crystals.

MESSAGE. From bomb-torn London comes this revealing little story:

After an all-night air raid, a crew of British bomb-demolition workers unearthed a huge time bomb which had fallen in the street beside an important government building. Carefully they hoisted it on a truck, rushed it to a large open field and there sought to explode it. But in spite of all efforts, the bomb did not go off. Gingerly the workers approached and opened the bomb. This is what they found: The bomb was a dud; it had been made in a munitions plant in one of the Nazi-conquered countries; and inside was a note which said, "This much, at least, we can do to help you."

BEWARE OF THE CAT

Remember George, the matchmaking cat? Here he is again, gaily supplying trouble . . . for a goofy pair of setter pups, a balky young man and — oh, yes! — a fast-thinking girl named Lynn. Ready? Go!

by Richard Powell

A Short Story Complete in This Issue

GEORGE, the Persian cat, was preparing to challenge a brace of English setters to a duel at a hundred paces. He crouched, eyes glowing like fireflies, and watched the two dogs romping on the big enclosed lawn next door. His long gray fur fluffed out to make him seem bigger, more terrifying.

Lynn Jamison combed electric crackles from his fur. "Yowl at them," she urged him. "Get them excited. Then maybe Hoby will come out and at least glare at me."

Even a glare, she thought, would be better than nothing. Hoby Brant, the young man who lived next door, hadn't spoken to her for a year. Not since the afternoon when she had cost him the Yacht Club Championship for star boats. He had needed a partner for the final race of the season, and she had assured him she was an expert sailor. Of course she really hadn't known a binnacle from a barnacle . . . but things would have gone very nicely if the boat hadn't jounced around so much. She had been seasick —

Hoby had taken the lost race very hard. Ever since he had been big enough to chin himself on his play pen, he had been interested in nothing except winning assorted championships. And it wasn't the first time she had spoiled his plans. Looking back on things, she realized that he had been very patient. She had always tagged along with him as persistently as a cinder in his shoe. Time after time she had coaxed him to be her partner in one sport or another.

Time after time he had discovered that she didn't know anything about the sport. His discoveries dated back to the time in their childhood when she had won the role of Fiji, the wild woman in his backyard circus, by claiming to be an expert tree climber. He had had to get a ladder to rescue her.

Life would have been much easier for both of them if she had wanted some other young man. Other young men told her she had lovely blue eyes, but all she wanted was for Hoby to say, "Keep your eyes on the ball." Other young men tried to slip their arms around her; Hoby wouldn't even feel her biceps. Other young men asked her to dinner and the theater. Hoby wouldn't even ask her to mend an old crew sock. She was just idiotic enough to yearn for Hoby instead of the other young men.

But she could never even hope for an old crew sock as long as Hoby wouldn't speak to her. Nowadays he refused to come out of his house if she were within sight. He was, obviously, afraid she would want to be his partner in a new sport he had taken up, now that he had tired of winning all the local championships in golf and tennis and squash and single sculls. He was training his brace of English setters to win the Autumn Field Trials for bird dogs.

All during the summer Lynn had been reading dozens of books on bird dogs. But this time she was determined not to do any bluffing. She wasn't going to pretend to be a bird-dog expert. She merely wanted a chance to show Hoby she could discuss the sport intelligently.

The trouble was that she couldn't get within discussion range of Hoby. She had tried dozens of methods of bringing him within range — all unsuccessful. Then she had an inspiration. Hoby hated cats. If one yowled around his house and disturbed his setters, he would certainly come out. So she had borrowed George.

"But, darling," George's mistress had said, "are you sure you want to borrow George? Perhaps you don't know his reputation. By an odd coincidence nearly a dozen girls who have borrowed George — or kept him for me when I've been away — have immediately snagged themselves a man. A permanent man."

"I never heard of his reputation and it sounds like sheer superstition," Lynn said. "I can do my own work in getting a man. All I want is a cat whose yowling will bring Hoby out of hiding."

"I'm sure George can do that," her friend murmured. "The question in my mind is, will George be satisfied with such an easy job? There's a certain danger, darling, in using a tiger to hunt mice."

LYNN looked at George now, and smiled. He didn't seem capable of dealing with anything more dangerous than a good big ball of yarn. He was still working himself up about the dogs. He was tuning bass viol strings deep in his throat. The growling noise rose in pitch suddenly, like a car accelerating in second gear. He began to stalk the dogs.

Lynn followed him to Hoby's picket fence and hid behind an evergreen. George sidled up to the barrier. His growl went up and down the scale like a police siren. The two dogs bounded to the fence, and Lynn waited happily for an uproar of barking and yowling.

Nothing happened.

That is, worse than nothing happened, from her point of view. The two dogs seemed delighted with George. They romped along the fence and invited him to play. She supposed that was because they were very young dogs and had never met cats. It wouldn't have been so bad if George had done his part. But George was puzzled. He sat down, curled his feathery tail around his paws like a steamer rug and stared off into the distance. The setters became practically slavish. They struck beautiful on-point poses. They rolled on their backs. Finally one of them sat down against the fence and wagged his tail. The tail slipped between the pickets.

George observed the tail with interest. It was long and fluffy, much like his own. He tapped the tail and was pleased when it fluttered. He was disposed to treat the tail as something apart from the dog, and to make friends with it.

Lynn said bitterly, "A fine pfft column you are! Well, if you won't yowl, I will. And you'll be blamed for it."

She cleared her throat and began. At first her yowls were feeble because she was embarrased at yowling before an expert. George peered at her as curiously as if she had started to lap milk from a saucer. Lynn told herself not to care, and put more volume in her yowls. She gained so much confidence soon that she tried one of the most difficult exercises in yowling — the double tremolo — and brought it off rather well.

A voice behind her growled, "Do you only get this way occasionally?"

She wheeled and saw Hoby. "Of course I don't," she gasped. "I mean, I do. No, I mean I never get this way, except —"

"A sad case. The S.P.C.A. ought to put you away."

"Hoby! Will you listen a moment?"

He grinned. "I was listening, and it sounded as if you needed a veterinarian. What's the idea?"

"Why — George was, uh — he was —"

Hoby saw George. "Oh," brightly, "another cat. Looks like a powder puff gone to seed."

"He is not another cat! He's the only cat here. And —" she added with a touch of genius — "if you insist on being cheaply funny I won't give you any more help in training your bird dogs."

"What!"

She began to put her summer's reading to use. "Those setters," she said, "are very young to be trained for the field."

"What if they are? I like winning championships the hard way. I'm going to win the Autumn Field Trials with these pups. What has that to do with your yowling?"

George looked disgusted and left.

"If you train setters when they're too young," she said with dignity, "they're likely to forget everything and go off chasing rabbits or cats. I was merely experimenting to see if you'd trained them not to notice cats."

He snorted: "Who ever heard of a real setter chasing cats? I admit that Hermit and Bachelor were interested in red-blooded animals at first, like rabbits. But cats are too sissy to interest — say, where did you get all this dope about bird dogs?"

BEFORE she could remember her good intentions, her tongue blurted, "I know all about bird dogs." As soon as the words popped out she was furious with herself. She hadn't meant to bluff this time. He asked suspiciously, "Where did you learn?"

"Right here, Hoby Brant," she snapped, deciding to brazen it out. "During those four years you were away at college."

"I wish I could trust you," he said wearily, "but you've fooled me too many times. This sounds like another of your bluffs. However, I'm not going to argue. You always could talk me into anything. You'd have me believing you know more about bird dogs than a flea. I'm going to let the dogs decide if you're telling the truth."

"That's silly. How could they?"

"They'll know if you're an expert. They can sense it, and will make friends with you. But it won't do any good to pat their heads and say, 'Nice doggie.' I've trained them to growl at people who do that. They don't like people who gush any more than I do."

He brought out the two young setters. Lynn trembled. She had never owned a dog. She hadn't the slightest idea how to make friends with one — except maybe by patting its head and saying, "Nice doggie." She stood perfectly still while they walked stiffly around her. One of them snuffled like a toy vacuum cleaner at something on her tweed skirt. She peered down. It was a tuft of gray fur from George. The dogs looked up at this two-legged creature who wore cat fur and uttered yowls, and found her very interesting. Two scimitar tails wagged. Lynn exhaled, and said, "Now do you believe me?"

"I don't know. We'll go out tomorrow and let your put up a few quail. Then we'll see."

Lynn went back to her house in a thoughtful mood and reread her books on bird dogs.

Hoby greeted her the next morning with a slight reserve, while the setters welcomed her like a long-lost bone. She had had the foresight to borrow a few tufts of fur from George. They followed the two dogs down a path leading to the fields. The September sun was warm, quail whistled in the hedges, and Lynn began to feel more confident. After all, her reading had taught her a lot. It shouldn't be hard to use the right hunting terms and to let Hoby do all the actual work of directing the dogs.

He turned into a stubble field. "See those two clumps of trees about a hundred yards apart?" he asked. "The ones separated by that fence? Since you're a bird-dog expert, you undoubtedly know that there aren't any quail in those trees this time of day. They're all out feeding in the fields."

"On grain, berries and insects," she added, importantly.

"Um, yes. I want you to take Bachelor and see how many quail you can drive into the north clump of trees. I'll take Hermit and the south clump. We'll see who collects more quail."

She gulped, "I'd rather stay with you."

He grinned fiendishly. "I'll bet you would! Then I'd never know whether or not you're bluffing. You can quarter the fields north of that fence. See you in two hours."

Lynn watched him climb over the fence into his own territory, which she hoped was filled with poison ivy. She tried to remember what the books said about driving quail. You had to allow for the wind carrying scent and the fact that quail would swerve away from was no use, because they fled whenever she came too near. She sat down and wept. Her legs felt like dead branches, she was hot and sticky, and all she needed was to be propped up on a stick to make a good scarecrow. And the two hours were nearly gone.

George and the dog were now playing a sort of tag. As she watched, George skittered under the boundary fence with Bachelor in pursuit. Both disappeared at high speed into Hoby's patch of woods. Almost at once quail began leaving. Lynn caught her breath. It was dreadful. Hoby had slaved for two hours to collect those birds, and now in another minute there wouldn't be enough quail left in his grove of trees to crowd a piece of toast. It was dreadful . . . or was it?

She watched five coveys whirl across the boundary fence and find a refuge in her own clump of trees. She began to bear up better under Hoby's misfortune. Ten minutes later people. You had to send the dog in at just the right angle. And you couldn't use spoken commands to the dog for fear of alarming the birds. The books had talked about hand signals.

"Go," she told Bachelor.

He began quartering the fields. Whenever he looked at her for guidance, she gave hand signals which were rather like the vague gestures of a woman telling a man where to hang a picture. Bachelor had no trouble finding and flushing quail. But she had no more control over where the birds flew than over so many feathers in a high wind. After an unsuccessful hour, she was feeling desperate. She had seen Hoby herding at least eight coveys into his grove of trees.

Bachelor froze into another point, and Lynn ordered him to put up the birds. The dog moved forward briskly. Quite unexpectedly, and against all the rules, the quail whistled out right at them. Lynn frowned. Quail were supposed to fly away from the dog. Bachelor nosed into the patch of stubble with an air of seeing what this was all about. Then he stopped and barked wildly.

On the other side of the stubble lounged a fluffy gray animal, manicuring his claws. "George!" she gasped. "You stop frightening these birds."

George nibbled at a tuft of grass. Bachelor approached him, wagging his tail as if sculling himself along. Lynn snapped, "Don't notice him, Bachelor." The dog did not obey. He stretched out on the ground a few feet away from George and rolled over, paws up. Lynn marched toward them to assert her authority. Both animals jumped up, ran away a short distance and sat down again to study each other.

Lynn chased them and chased them. It she spotted Hoby and the other setter returning from their final quartering of the south fields. Bachelor saw them, too, and fled back to Lynn. George didn't return.

Hoby called, "I couldn't find any this trip. How many coveys did you collect?"

"Five."

He climbed over the fence and sent both dogs into her reservation to put up the birds. Five coveys flew out. "Pretty good," he said — "for a girl."

"Yes, isn't it. Let's see how many you beat me by."

HE LED the way back across the fence and waved the setters toward his patch of trees. Bachelor pointed superbly; Hermit, after a slight hesitation, backed him up. "Put 'em up," Hoby ordered. The dogs plunged into the underbrush. No birds flew out.

"Not so good," Lynn said, "for anybody." "I can't understand it. I chased fifteen coveys in there."

"Maybe they were too jittery to settle down. They might have flown out the other side right away."

"That may be it. You know, Lynn, I'm awfully glad I didn't catch you bluffing again."

"Are you?"

"Uh-huh. I've always thought we'd make a good team if you could get over that bluffing habit of yours. Would you like to be my partner in mixed doubles and things?"

"I'd love to," she gushed with enthusiasm. Her heart began fluttering like a wing. If she and Hoby saw each other a lot, and if he didn't find her too dumb from a sportsman's point of view, maybe someday he would even get around to suggesting going in husband-and-wife tournaments.

"I'd love to," she said.

"Swell. Let's shake on it. We'll have a grand time, Lynn. We can start right in improving your flutter kick and your backhand and your explosion shots and the way you sit a fast trot, and — what are those dogs pointing?"

Lynn saw the two setters on point again at Hoby's clump of trees. She remembered suddenly that George was still there. "They're just practicing," she said hastily.

"Trained setters don't practice on nothing. Come to think of it, why did they go on point before if there weren't any quail? I'm going to find out."

"DON'T," she begged. "Maybe something dangerous is in there." He looked at her as if she had suggested defaulting a match, and walked into the grove. Lynn followed on shaking legs. The dogs stopped and barked. In front of them was George, fighting a maple leaf. Hoby yelled and rushed forward. George smoked away.

"If I ever catch that long-haired cat," Hoby promised, "I'll give him a jail haircut. Now I know why there weren't any quail. He frightened them away. And you put him up to it!"

"I didn't! He ran in here all by himself. Bachelor was chasing him."

"And why did you let Bachelor chase him? I thought you knew how to handle bird dogs. Just a bluff, huh?"

"I thought I could learn, but George came along and —"

Hoby wasn't listening. He took Bachelor by the scruff of the neck and said sternly, "Bad! Bad, understand? No more cats!" The dog's tail drooped like a wet mop. Hoby turned to Lynn and said, in the same tone, "We'll forget about being a team."

"I was just trying to impress you," she wailed. "Don't you ever pretend a little, just to impress people?"

"Never. And when I say I can do something, like winning the Autumn Field Trials, I know I can do it."

"I hate you when you act so sure of everything," she cried. "I hope people catch you bluffing some day. I hope somebody makes you look awfully silly."

"When you catch me bluffing," he said, "I'll apologize humbly and ask you to be friends again. Until then —"

He whistled the dogs to heel and marched away. George came out of hiding. He followed Bachelor and tried to interest him in a joint attack on blowing leaves. Bachelor looked at him with shamed eyes, and padded on after his master.

George vanished into the bushes. A hundred yards down the path he reappeared. He was staring off into the distance with his back to the setter. As Bachelor approached, George exploded into the air like a frightened hen, and fled. Bachelor tensed to spring after him, then caught himself and dutifully continued to follow Hoby. But Bachelor was gradually forgetting that he was in disgrace. His tail lifted from half-mast to wagging position.

A moment later George leaped at him from ambush. George's teeth were bared in a Halloween grimace and his paws were raised as if he were playing ghost. It was too much for the young setter. He tumbled over backward, yelped happily and fled across country with George in pursuit. Hermit barked hysterically and followed.

Hoby called back to Lynn, "If I ever catch that animal he'll wish he'd stuck to mice!" Then he also joined the chase.

Lynn smiled grimly. "It may just be," she told herself, "that Hoby is George's idea of a fair-sized mouse —"

During the next two weeks her idea proved to be partly correct. Except, of course, that George was no more interested in Hoby than in a cold shower. He was interested in the setters. He hung around their kennels, trailed them on workouts in the fields, and lured them away on romps.

People began to talk about the odd triumvirate. There were rumors that the setters had been heard trying to purr, that all three had been seen in a hilarious tangle in a ball of string, and that Bachelor was learning how to prowl along the top of a fence. There was even a report that the trio had been observed hunched beside a mouse runway in the fields. Nobody seemed to know how much truth was in these rumors, and nobody cared. It was enough that, for once, they had something on Hoby.

Hoby went through these difficult days

SIX MILLION NEW JOBS

"I HEAR the defense program is putting people to work. Where?"

That question is on the lips of millions of unemployed workers today. It is asked by scores of people who have come to my office for that sole purpose. It is repeated in many of the letters that come to my desk.

To answer that question, let's take a look at the defense program and see what effects it is having on jobs and pay checks. Here are four basic points to keep in mind.

1. Our government has authorized the spending of between six and seven billion dollars for armaments and supplies during this fiscal year. Even larger sums will be spent for defense during the two following years.

2. This stupendous program means that more jobs will be created in our country during the next twelve months than we've ever seen in any single year before.

3. In private industry alone, five or six million new positions will be developed. In addition, about a million men will be taken into our armed forces.

4. Even more millions will find employment when still larger amounts are expended for military purposes in the two following years.

Summing it all up, a spokesman for the National Defense Commission recently put it: "We can look forward with confidence to jobs for most of the old and the young who are now unemployed."

The picture of America at work again should be a pleasant one. Let's look at that picture in more detail.

As you would expect, the "war baby" industries, such as aircraft, shipbuilding, engine making, explosives and machine tools, have been the first to profit. Now blazing along at top speed, private shipyards alone have added 25,000 men in recent months. When peak production is hit in the spring of 1942, at least another 100,000 workers will be needed.

But — and this is an important but — all the real war babies put together now employ only about half a million. In other words, a very small proportion of the workers who find jobs because of the defense program land them directly in this field. The great majority will get work in occupations that seem to have little connection with armaments.

In the coming months our defense program will create more new jobs — more quickly — than the United States has ever before seen. Not only factory jobs, but all kinds — in all kinds of private business. This is why

by Lyle M. Spencer

Director, Science Research Associates

Take the case of the unemployed bookkeeper who came to my office the other day: "You tell me that the shipyards are going to hire 100,000 more men," he said. "But I'm not a riveter or a drill-press operator or a loftman. What good is all this defense program going to do me?"

"According to your record," I said, "you had a temporary bookkeeping job last summer with a farm-implement wholesaler. Wouldn't you like to get that position back?"

"Sure," he answered, "but what's that got to do with defense?"

"Plenty. I know a bookkeeper who quit his job here in Chicago for higher-paying work in Joliet. He was hired by a construction concern that's building a new munitions plant. You might have filled the job he vacated if you had known about it in time."

"Maybe I could have," he agreed.

Office Help Needed

"AND that's not all. A new gas-mask plant is going up right here in town. They're already starting to hire experienced power-machine operators. Soon they'll be needing office boys, stenographers, billing clerks and bookkeepers like yourself."

The bookkeeper brightened perceptibly. "Do you think there'd be a chance for me?"

"If not there," I answered, "certainly somewhere else. Dozens of defense contracts are being filled here in Chicago, and they all need bookkeepers."

He stood up. "I never thought of that," he said. "I guess I better get moving."

And so had a lot of others.

Because even if they can't get jobs in any of the "war baby" industries, there are still the "second cousins" of the war babies. And it is in these "second cousins" that job opportunities will abound for the greatest number. Five hundred different factories, for example, make the parts and equipment that go into a single Army bomber. Hence when you hear that the aircraft plants are busy, you know that copper miners and oil drillers, lumberjacks and farmers are being called upon for their products by the airplane factory.

Exactly the same thing applies in other defense industries, with the result that Help Wanted signs are going up everywhere. A Pacific Coast employment agency tells me that October and November were the best months of their twenty-five years' experience — "And the boom hasn't really started in earnest," they added. This agency specializes in sales and clerical help in the needle trades — not what you would call warlike occupations.

A Y.M.C.A. employment director says, "We have just had our best month since 1936." A large office-help agency in downtown New York reports that the last three months make 1940 their best on record. And the New York State Employment Service finds a marked increase in placements in the past four months over the same period a year ago. In such pacific occupations as clerical, sales and services (exclusive of domestic help), jobs filled this past October were respectively 71%, 83% and 86% greater than for the preceding October.

And, remember, "the boom hasn't really started yet!"

Obviously, dropping seven billion dollars worth of orders into industry is just like tossing a stone into a pond: the ripples spread out in all directions.

"I have a call here for a carpenter," one agency man said to me, still a bit stunned at the trend of events. "I've already phoned fifteen applicants whose names are on file — and every one of them is working!"

These carpenters aren't producing armaments. But the Army is putting up barracks by the hundred. Industrial plants are expanding. And the government is building dwellings for defense-industry workers, setting aside $95,000,000 for 110 of these projects alone. The immediate result is the hiring of 35,000 new men in the building trades.

Activity in Textiles

IN THE clothing field, to cite another instance, 21,000 have recently been hired in the woolen and worsted mills alone, and cotton processing reflects the same activity as the government buys uniforms, blankets, tents, sheets and a dozen other items.

Such fields as these may be entirely foreign to your experience, yet you may feel the backwash of this activity. In Schenectady, for example, I recently found the retail stores crying for salesgirls. Why? For two reasons. First, with factories all about going at full blast, more workmen's families have more money to spend, hence there are more sales to be made. Second, with the factories bidding lustily for workers, salesgirls are quitting the stores for the mills, leaving the retailers shorthanded.

The expenditure of bigger pay rolls, of course, is one of the most far-reaching effects of the defense program from the job seeker's angle. War orders are quickly converted into wages, profits and dividends and we are already approaching the 1929 high-water mark in our national income. That means more money spent for consumer goods: for clothing, radios, toys, furniture, cameras and what have you. After years of depression and unemployment long-deferred purchases are being made, which means more jobs in the manufacture and distribution of those goods.

Already my friend who quit his bookkeeping job for a defense job in Joliet has "SWELL chance for you," said Niels Jorgensen of the Homicide Squad. "Right down your alley. Broken lily ... poor butterfly ... shattered plaything. Sob sister's delight."

"I'm not a sob sister," I informed him. "I'm a hard-working girl reporter taking advantage of your well-known fondness for a pretty face or a neat ankle to get the pole position on a good story."

I knew that would burn him up. Niels is big and clumsy as a bear — a polar bear with blond hair and a craggy, dependable sort of face. Some day I'm going to marry him, but he doesn't know that — yet.

"Look," he said indignantly. "For going on three years now I haven't looked at another pretty face, and you know it."

"Nor a neat ankle?"

He shrugged, bearlike, and ignored that.

"You want a story or don't you?"

"Sure. So the murdered girl was a pretty moth singed in the flame. And then what?"

"She was a beauty," Niels said almost reverently. "Want to see her?"

"Thanks, no. Just tell me."

"Well, she was dark; black hair, brown eyes, tiny hands and feet. Ivy Tower was the name she went under. May have been her real name, for all I know, but probably not. A heavy pottery book end did the dirty work, we think; we found it in the sink."

"In the sink?"

"Sure. Washed clean. You know about fingerprints, don't you? So did the guy who did it."

"Who was that, Sherlock?"

Niels broke off a third of a stick of gum and started chewing it thoughtfully. "Don't know," he admitted. "There were plenty of men in her life. But there are only two likely ones. A goer and a comer, you might say."

"And what's that in plain English?"

"One was going out of her life, and the other was trying hard to take his place. Tichner was the goer. He's a slim, dark, nervous guy; very quick talker. Some sort of engineer. About thirty-five, I'd say. Good-looking. The other one lives right across from the Tower girl's apartment. He can see her windows; you know how these apartment houses are built in wings? That's how they happened to meet, as I get it. His name is Weston; he's a lot younger than Tichner — not thirty yet, I'd peg him — a spoiled, rich man's son. Sulky, snooty, superior sort of person. But he was crazy about the gal. On a party a couple of weeks ago he got tight and threatened to drive off a bridge with her if she didn't quit playing around. Jealous as the devil."

"SOUNDS bad," I said. "They're right on the same floor; he could have gone to her apartment, had a row, killed her, and got back home without being seen. And he had plenty of motive, according to you."

"Plenty. She was still crazy about this Tichner guy; as I get it, Tichner was the fly in young Weston's ointment. But this joint has automatic push-button elevators, you know, and at that time of night anybody could have gone up, with a little luck, without being noticed."

"And what time was that?"

"Between eleven and about twelve-thirty. We know it wasn't earlier than eleven, because a couple by the name of Graham who live on this floor came up with her about that time. And it couldn't have been later than twelve-thirty, because that was the time Weston called Headquarters."

"Well, young Weston's waiting over in his apartment. Tichner should be there by now, too; I sent one of the boys after him. Want to come along while I talk to them?"

"You don't have to talk unless you want to, Mr. Tichner," Niels said politely. "Only — it helps."

"I have nothing to conceal," snapped Tichner. "What do you want to know?"

"Your relations with Miss Tower; they were friendly?"

"Very."

"Where were you last night between the hours of eleven and twelve-thirty?"

"At home."

"Alone?"

"Certainly."

"All evening?"

"No. I was out until shortly after ten. I sat up and read until midnight. I was expecting a phone call about that time; I had made the appointment late because I was not sure when I would be in."

"Ah!" beamed Niels. "A phone call from whom?"

Tichner glanced toward the corner of the room where young Weston was sitting with his head buried in his hands.

"From Mr. Weston. He had been trying to get in touch with me for several days. I was too busy to talk to him. I told him to call me then, and we'd have it out, once and for all. He was quite concerned about my relations with Miss Tower."

"And you were going to tell him — what?"

Tichner hesitated for just an instant.

"If he would give me the opportunity to explain — something he had refused to do in the past — I was going to tell him the truth: that I was not in the least interested in Miss Tower; that I was engaged to another young woman, and expected to be married next June."

"And this other young woman?"

"Is it necessary to drag her name into this mess?" Tichner asked angrily.

"You don't have to tell me," said Niels. "But — it would not be difficult for us to find out, I imagine."

"Anne Kindred," growled Tichner.

My eyebrows went up; Anne Kindred had about the most petulant face that ever haunted a society editor.

"J. J.'s daughter?" asked Niels.

"That's right. J. J. Kindred's daughter, Anne Kindred. Anything wrong about that?"

"Not at all," Niels said soothingly. "And did Mr. Weston call you at the appointed time?"

"I don't know. Miss Tower called me shortly before twelve, and I was talking to her until around twelve-thirty."

"I see. I guess that's all for the present, Mr. Tichner." Tichner strode across the room and stared out the window, toward the apartment across the way, where the two blinds were closely drawn.

"Would you care to answer a few questions, Mr. Weston?"

"You can ask them." The young man didn't even lift his head from his hands.

"Suppose you tell us about last night; what you did, everything that happened before you found Miss Tower's body."

"I spent the entire evening here. Right here in this apartment. Never left it until I couldn't stand it any longer, and went over to Ivy's apartment and found her — dead." He started sobbing, and I had to grit my teeth to keep from crying too. It's awful to hear a big man break like that.

"And when was that?"

"I don't know, exactly. I'd called Tichner about midnight; perhaps a few minutes after. His line was busy. I waited about ten minutes and called again. The line was still busy. I called a third time, and it was still busy. So I called Ivy's number, and when I got the busy signal there, I knew he must be talking

"THERE IS A TIDE..."

The story of an average American girl

by Donald Hough

ONE morning in September, 1933, the clouds let go above Chicago and hit the morning rush-hour traffic on the nose.

At the corner of Michigan Boulevard and Randolph Street the traffic officer on duty slipped his thin raincoat over his uniform and snapped the rubber cover on his cap. A bus driver coming down the incline toward Randolph turned the knob that put the windshield wiper into operation. It swished back and forth, cutting a hole in the downpour.

Within the bus a good-looking girl stood pressed against the corner of a seat by the jam of passengers; she bent over and looked out the rain-streaked window. She frowned. This meant umbrellas. Yesterday it was the candy department for a special sale, the day before it had been draperies. Today, either umbrellas or raincoats. Or rubbers.

The bus crawled on, stopping and starting jerkily. The crowd within thinned out, and presently our young lady joined those who were waiting to get off. At State Street she got out and glanced up at the big clock. Late again. Hurry. She held her hands over her hat in a futile gesture against the rain and dodged through street traffic and into the department store of Mandel Brothers.

She reported for work breathless and wet.

"Umbrellas, Miss Scott," she was told crisply.

That's what you got when you were a member of the Flying Squadron, crack sales group shifted all over the store to meet the point of highest pressure for the day.

So she went to work. The other salespeople in the umbrella department were glad to see her. She was not only adept at selling but always good company, and cheerful.

The cheerfulness was put on. She was not cheerful. Her mind was not on her work.

Her mind was on the stage.

When Martha Scott had graduated from the University of Michigan some months before, her mind was on the stage, too (she had accidentally taken a course in dramatics during her undergraduate years). The University had given her a teacher's certificate, entitling her to practice the profession of A B C's in any public schoolhouse in the land. She filed it away in her trunk. For it is an old custom for schoolteachers to wish they were actresses, just as it is for actresses to have an almost uncontrollable desire to sit in some vine-clad schoolhouse, listening to the birds and resting their feet.

Canny Maneuver

UNLIKE most schoolteachers, however, Miss Scott did not make an immediate frontal attack on Broadway, smilingly ready to accept the lead in any suitable play. She was wiser than most; her native Scotch caniness prompted her to go to Chicago, where she knew there was less expert competition than Broadway would offer.

All she hoped for was a bit, any kind of a small part, in stock or repertory.

It is painful to have to report that this maneuver failed. Nobody wanted her in either stock or repertory. She couldn't even get a job as an off-stage noise.

She took her broken heart over to Mandel Brothers. And there we just have seen her as a leading member of the Flying Squadron, doing her bit in the umbrella department on this rainy morning.

But you can't have your mind on too many things.

One day Miss Scott got fired.

We next see our young lady of the bus behind the notions counter in the large department store of Crowley-Milner's, in Detroit. This seems, to the layman, like something of a comedown from the Flying Squadron, but Miss Scott still is of the opinion that notions was harder. Unfortunately — or rather fortunately — she tried to relieve the strain by keeping her mind on the theater.

She got — you know. That pink slip again. It was a lucky break.

Just before this she had been offered a job at the Bonstelle Theater, a semicommercial, experimental type of playhouse in Detroit. The offer was to do walk-ons at $2.50 per week. She had not taken it, partly because it would have added nothing to her stage experience, but mostly for the reason that she was already doing more than enough walking behind that notions counter all day.

But now she had to take it.

And before long she was getting a few lines to speak, which automatically raised her income to five bucks every Saturday. That is, during those weeks when the theater was running.

No Scout to Guide Her

NOW, it would be interesting if I could say at this point that a movie scout happened along, yanked her out to Hollywood and threw her at a big producer, who in turn tossed her into the arms of, say, Robert Taylor.

But I cannot, for this is just an average story about an average American girl who got into the movies the average way. At this point, then, Martha Scott got the average break: she was given some small parts in a repertory company playing the smaller cities and towns in Michigan. It added to her experience, and when she returned to the Bonstelle she was raised to fifteen smackers a week. Not much, as such things go, but she knew she was on her way now.

This was in 1934. One of the things that happened in 1934 was the second edition of the Chicago Century of Progress. Mr. T. W. Stevens, of the Bonstelle, got the hunch to present at the Fair a series of cut versions of Shakespeare, seven shows a day, eight on Saturdays and Sundays. He nominated Miss Scott to run in this theatrical marathon, taking ingénue roles. The undertaking was a huge success, in spite of its being virtually across the street from a competing attraction known as Miss Sally Rand.

Miss Scott points to this success — that Shakespeare ran second only to Miss Rand at the box office — as proving the interest of the American public in the finer things of life. She is probably right, up to a point; but it happens that I was a frequent visitor to that Fair, living not far away, and I gained the impression that most of the Shakespeare patrons were interested in the finer things of life only by way of overflow from Miss Rand's emporium. I tried to explain this to Miss Scott the other day. She got indignant.

Anyway, after five solid months of this, the company moved to the San Diego Fair. When this one closed, Miss Scott, who had been saving her pennies, emptied her sock and counted the spoils. One hundred and fifty dollars.

New York.

At this precise moment Mr. Jed Harris was casting a strange, unconventional play on Broadway. It was called Our Town. He needed somebody for the feminine lead. He had tried out a number of people and had come up against a desperate situation: one week to go, and no Marines in sight.

Up popped Martha Scott, looking for a job. Mr. Harris, who by this time was almost ready to sign up Boris Karloff for the part, told her to get in there and see what she could do.

You probably know what she did. Seven months on Broadway in one of the most successful plays of the year. The sensation of the play? None other than our little lady of the bus, of the Flying Squadron and of notions. Now all we have to do is to get her into the movies, and then our story is done.

This may not be as simple as it seems.

Following her success on the stage, Martha Scott was invited to the Coast to test for the

IRON

"Keep searching the hills," barked the general, "until you find that iron!" But all that Martin wanted to find now was a certain girl soldier

by Pearl S. Buck

You Can Begin the Story Here

MARTIN LIU, student for seven years in the United States, returned to China against the command of his father, a wealthy merchant of Peking. The young man felt that his place was with his own people, helping in the struggle against the hated invaders. He was surprised when his father did not meet him at the station, more surprised when he learned that his father went around Peking with a bodyguard of Japanese soldiers, and horrified when most of the guests at the homecoming dinner in his honor turned out to be Japanese officials. When he demanded an explanation, his father was evasive, but from his sister, Siu-li, Martin finally received confirmation of his suspicions that the unthinkable had really happened. In a stormy scene he called his father a traitor and fled from the house of his ancestors. He and his sister started out on foot to join the Chinese armies in the northwest. Their guide on the long and devious journey was a young girl, Meng-an. During the weeks of their trek, Martin found himself more and more interested in this selfless and uncommunicative but very capable little patriot. More and more he wondered if the heart of a woman beat under the ragged boy's clothes of her disguise.

Finally they reached an inn outside of enemy territory. When Meng-an came out of her room that evening, Martin was not prepared for what he saw — a slim young girl soldier in a khaki uniform. She saluted him and gave him a small, secret smile. It was the first she had ever given him.

CONCLUSION

"YOU MUST go to our general," Meng-an told him. Three days more had brought them to the stronghold of this Chinese army to which she belonged. For three days they had walked among a tranquil people, tilling and working the land as though war were in another world. Night brought them to the camp itself, where he would go to the men's division and Siu-li and Meng-an to the women's. They halted at the gate of a temple compound, where guards stood. Once inside they must part. Thus Meng-an had paused to speak.

"I will see him tonight," she said, "and when I have given him my secret messages from the old city, I will tell him of you. He will be glad, for he needs men like you."

Martin did not want to part from her. "When shall we see each other?" he said boldly.

The flicker in her eyes he could discern, but not its meaning. Was it feeling for him or against him? He did not know.

"There are many meetings for us all," she said, and whether it was promise or evasion he still did not know. She gave him no time to think. She led the way inside the gate and they were parted. He was given food and a bed, and by dark he slept as all slept, because light at night meant oil, and oil was money, and money must be spent on bullets for the enemy.

At dawn, he rose, called by a bugle, and after food Martin was summoned by a young man so carelessly clothed as a soldier that the upper part of him was covered by a farmer's coat.

"Are you the son of Liu Ming Chen?" he inquired abruptly of Martin.

"How do you know my father's name?"

"We all know it," Martin was silenced by fear. Why should all here know the name of his quiet, scholar father in Peking except now as a traitor. He said nothing.

"The general calls you," the man said. "Follow me."

WITHOUT hesitation Martin followed, and found himself in the doorway of the cave-house where the general lived at the back of the temple as many did here, among the high, barren mountains. But this room was comfortable with furniture and the floor was rock, swept clean. The general was not a fat old man, but a young thin-bodied man in a faded uniform. No one could have said he was anything more than another, except agile and clever, relentless if he were an enemy.

"One tells me you know metals," he said to Martin without greeting.

That one, Martin knew, was Meng-an. He wondered jealously if she knew this man well and if they were friends. He had missed her already, for when he woke he wondered if today he would see her and how and when.

"It is true," he replied.

The young general looked at him shrewdly.

"You left your father," he said.

"Yes," Martin said. The man knew that! "You came with a girl soldier."

"Yes," Martin replied again. The man knew everything.

"Many leave their parents these days," the general said gravely. "Once when I was a child I was sent to a Christian school. In their sacred book I found one day by chance words like this: 'And a man's foes shall be they of his own household.' I who had been taught the doctrine of Wu Wei, I thought, how evil are these Christians not to know filial duty! But the days are come." He paused a second. "I, too, left my parents. We must seek a new foundation for the state, lest we be lost."

THE general's accent was not that of a peasant. "Did you go abroad?" Martin asked.

"Yes — who told you?" the general replied.

"No one — but where?" Martin asked again.

"To Harvard and to Leipsic."

"And you are here," Martin said. It was wonder enough.

"I would be nowhere else," the general said. He hesitated a moment, and then went on: "Out of these inner regions will come those who will take back the land."

"But do these people know they are being attacked?" Martin asked. "They are so calm, and they work in their fields as they always have."

"By day," the general broke in. "By night they put down their hoes and take their guns. But by what good luck you came I cannot say. We lack iron, and there is ore in these hills. The rocks shine when they are split. Is that iron? If it is, I will set about mining it out. It may be silver — and it is not so quickly useful. Do you see your task?"

"Yes," Martin said. He was looking at the seamed side of the cave as he answered. In the rock was his task. He must find iron to make bullets for the enemy.

"Have you any message for your father?" the general asked abruptly. "Meng-an will start for Peking tonight."

"She goes back?" Martin cried.

"It is her work — to slip between the enemy armies and find out everything and bring me word."

"She told you of my father?" Martin said.

"Is this your sister?" the general asked Martin. Siu-li blushed. The uniform, the straight-cut hair, the pistol, could not hide what she was — a girl to her. That was a — a trick of Ivy's, to call at all sorts of hours. She never went to bed until nearly morning.

"I knew she was still up; the shades were drawn in the living room, but I could see light around them. At last I couldn't stand it any longer. I went to her apartment and rapped. There was no reply, but I could see light coming from under the door. I tried the knob. The door wasn't locked. I went in. And there she was on the floor, believe me or not, the lights blazing down on her —"

Tichner turned, and caught Niels' eye.

"I guess I ought to tell you — Ivy mentioned Weston last night when she was talking to me." Tichner hesitated, as if he hated to go on. "She said she was afraid of him. That he'd made threats —"

"That's a lie!" shouted Weston, springing up. "I did that only once in my life, and then I was drunk. At a party — I wouldn't have harmed a hair of her head for anything in the world. I loved her, and that's more than you ever did, you dirty —"

Niels came between the two men, waving away the assistance of the uniformed man at the door. "Easy does it," he said. "You don't like Mr. Tichner, do you, Mr. Weston?"

"I hate his guts!" Weston cried. "He treated Ivy like a dog. She was crazy about him; God knows why, but she was. Oh, I know she wasn't perfect, but I loved her. That's something, isn't it? You don't kill people you love, do you?"

"Sometimes you do, Mr. Weston," Niels said gently. "If you're very jealous."

OUT in the little kitchenette — Niels had said he wanted a drink, and asked me if I wanted to come along — my big blond hero sipped ice water and looked bearlike and unhappy. "All I've got is a hunch," he said. "You can't indict on that, though — to say nothing of getting a conviction."

"And how does the hunch read?"

"Never mind. How's the feminine intuition we hear so much about? In working order?"

I considered for a moment. "Well, Tichner's alibi can be busted wide open, of course. He knew young Weston was going to call him around midnight. He could have left his phone off the cradle, and that would have resulted in the busy signal when Weston called."

"No," sighed Niels. "It won't do. Everything points to an unpremeditated killing. A man doesn't lay elaborate plans for an alibi, and then go to the scene of the murder without a weapon!"

"Perhaps he has a party line; if anyone on the line were using the phone —"

"I've checked on that with the phone company," Niels interrupted. "Tichner has a private line. Try again!"

"There's not much to try, is there? If Tichner's out, then Weston's in — if you're right in the assumption that it was one of these two men. Weston had the better opportunity, and crazy jealousy has been the motive for a lot of murders."

"That's right," said Niels. He put down the half-empty glass, and broke off another tiny fragment of gum. "Come along," he said. "I'm going to play my hunch. Keep your fingers crossed, will you?"

I tagged along, back into the living room of Weston's apartment, where the two men were silently glowering at each other under the tolerant eye of the Irish cop guarding the door.

"You live all alone, Tichner?" asked Niels.

"I do. A woman comes in every afternoon and cleans up. She's gone long before I get home. I eat downtown."

"She wouldn't be at your place now, by any chance?" Niels glanced at his watch. "It's half after ten."

"Not a chance," said Tichner. "She never comes until afternoon."

"GOOD," Niels glanced in my direction. "Virginia, call Mr. Tichner's number in exactly ten minutes. I'll be back presently." He drew the uniformed man into the hallway with him, gave him an order in a low voice, and disappeared. The cop came in and stood with his back to the door.

I watched the little gold hand on my wrist watch. It seemed about the longest ten minutes I can remember. Weston still slouched despondently in his chair, while Tichner paced up and down the room, restless as a caged tiger.

"Ten minutes," I said finally. "What is your number, Mr. Tichner?"

"Two, one-four, one-nine. But there's no sense calling the house. There's no one there," he said.

I shrugged and picked up the instrument. The telephone stand was in front of the window, and I could see the drawn blinds of Ivy Tower's apartment, directly in front of me. It was kind of awkward, holding the phone and dialing, with two fingers of my left hand crossed for Niels, but I managed it, and carefully dialed the number Tichner had given me.

As the dial flipped back from the last number, I almost dropped the phone — for, loudly enough for everyone in the room to hear, came the impatient, querulous, all-too-familiar busy signal!

"Why, it's the busy signal!" I said idiotically. I glanced curiously at Tichner, but he didn't notice that. He was staring out the window, beyond me, and his handsome face was darkly flushed.

I looked where he was looking: at Ivy Tower's apartment. One of the blinds had just been yanked up, and Niels was standing there in the window, holding a telephone in his hand. The distance was too great for me to be sure, but I think he was smiling.

There was a sudden commotion behind me. I swung around just in time to see the big Irish cop bear Tichner to the floor. Apparently Tichner had tried to dash out through the door which led to Weston's bedroom.

I'm supposed to be a reporter, but I can't record what happened in the next few seconds. I remember that Weston stood there staring, saying over and over, "Well, I'll be damned!" Tichner was grunting and straining and threatening and swearing, and the uniformed policeman was enjoying the

CONSTIPATION NEEDS TO BE TALKED ABOUT

Yes, constipation needs to be talked about. For you can really do something to relieve common constipation.

Medical research has devised an intelligent modern way.

Certain muscles in your body, that you cannot see or feel, play a most important part in the elimination of waste. When sufficient bulk is lacking in your food, these muscles may get little exercise. Soon they become flabby, and you are likely to be constipated. However, when they are regularly exercised by bulk, which gives them work to do, they tend to firm up and you are less likely to be constipated.

SARÁKA exercises the intestinal muscles.

SARÁKA was created to give you bulk and to help you exercise your intestinal muscles in a convenient, practical way. SARÁKA is a modern medical improvement over the roughage and toughage which civilized man need no longer tolerate in his food. A few tiny granules . . . small and easy to take . . . expand to form the soft bulk so often needed to exercise the lazy intestine and work the under-worked bowel.

SARÁKA is different. The gentle bulk it forms is soft, not rough; smooth, not harsh; jelly-like, not oily. There is nothing else exactly like SARÁKA. SARÁKA is not bulk alone. In addition to bulk, it also contains a gentle vegetable aid to elimination. It supplies "softage," not roughage; softage with a plus*, for dual action.

If you suffer with common constipation, take SARÁKA faithfully for a few days and begin to re-educate your intestinal muscles. See how easily this intelligent modern method helps to healthful regularity. Get SARÁKA at your druggist today.

OUT OF THE FRYING PAN

INTO THE ROSE BOWL

It couldn't happen—but it did. And this is the amazing story of how Clark Shaughnessy, who coached the University of Chicago football team to dismal defeat and eventual extinction, is now leading an unbeaten, untied Stanford eleven toward the nation's greatest gridiron glory

by Harold Parrott

MOST envied of all the football coaches in the land is gray, soft-spoken Clark Shaughnessy. His Stanford University team will be host in the Rose Bowl classic next Wednesday—a dream team in a dream game.

To Shaughnessy, certainly, the whole fantastic affair is very much like a dream. He pinches himself at intervals to make quite sure that he isn't sleepwalking through this success story. For if just one year ago a poll had been taken to pick the most unsuccessful coach of 1939, Shaughnessy would have won hands down.

The University of Chicago's hapless and hopeless Maroons, under Shaughnessy, lost last year to Harvard, 61-0; to Michigan, 85-0; to Ohio State, 61-0; to — but why go on? The opposition ran up point totals on Chicago's struggling sons that looked like the national debt. The Maroons didn't win a Big Ten game last year. They didn't as much as score in one. They hardly ever even reached the line of scrimmage! Michigan, Illinois and Ohio State tore off 192 points on Chicago U. while Shaughnessy squirmed and suffered on the bench.

And, to climax that disastrous season, President Hutchins legislated football right out of Chicago University, leaving Shaughnessy without even a team, and without much prospect of getting another team—who'd want a coach with a record like his?

Even when Stanford University amazed the football world by calling him in to coach the Cardinals, things looked just as dark for Shaughnessy. For he inherited a Stanford team that had failed to win any of its first eight starts in 1939. It had been walloped by the University of Southern California, 33-0, by the University of California, 32-14. Santa Clara beat it down. University of Washington and Washington State stepped on it. The Pacific Coast laughed at it.

It seemed as if Shaughnessy had traded one headache for another.

A Different Story

NEVERTHELESS, in one brief year Shaughnessy has spun a football drama that would make Hollywood scenario writers cry, "Impossible!" Stanford, this year, became the swiftest-striking team in football, one of the most rapierlike gridiron machines of all time, ripping through nine straight opponents without suffering a defeat or a tie.

Saturday after Saturday the Cardinals ran roughshod over the very teams which had trampled them a year ago. They were the same Cardinals who had been dismal failures in 1939; but they had been made into a glorious success by the tools Shaughnessy gave them.

What are those tools?

"Chiefly, the ability to act," Shaughnessy says. "I'm not a dramatic critic, but I demand a well-played part. If you can teach your players to be convincing when they're just making believe that they're carrying the ball, you can decoy the opposition out of position far more effectively than by blocking."

The big Beavers of Oregon State pushed Stanford all over the field in the first half of their game this season. Stanford was lucky to escape with a 7-7 tie at intermission—but in the second half Shaughnessy's cast produced some acting that would have done credit to a Hampden or a Barrymore. The duped Beavers chased phantom ball carriers all over the field. They tackled everybody but the nonchalant-looking Stanford man who actually had the ball. By the clock, Stanford scored 21 points in four and one-half minutes of play, to sew up the game. It was the most amazing performance of the season; the experts were left gasping.

Clark Shaughnessy: He's proved that the football is quicker than the eye

It was the same story when Shaughnessy's gridiron actors met Southern California. The mighty Trojan team, which had beaten Duke in the Rose Bowl on January 1, 1939, and had thrashed Tennessee in the same classic last New Year's Day, was tied with Stanford, 7-7, with only a minute and a half of playing time left. But in those last ninety seconds Shaughnessy's men called on the magic he had taught them and scored two sudden touchdowns to sweep Southern California into a 21-7 defeat.

Touchdowns Out of Thin Air

IN THEIR November battle with the Huskies of the University of Washington, it looked like grim reality at last had caught up with Stanford's artists of make-believe. The Huskies had been tabbed by the experts as the pre-season favorites in the Pacific Coast Conference—and they lived up to their advance notices by stepping out to a 10-0 lead at half time. The experts were to be proved right, after all; the time had come for the debunking of the Stanford myth. But there was still the second half, and in that second half Shaughnessy's magicians snatched three touchdowns out of the thin air in one of the most spectacular rallies in the history of the conference. The final score was Stanford, 20, Washington, 10.

These second-half Stanford surges aren't luck. They're planned. Clark Shaughnessy is the greatest plotter in football. He has more ideas than a mad inventor. He took the "Model T" formation, which is almost as old as football itself, added a few flanker and man-in-motion gadgets, imparted the Shaughnessy spark and—presto!—the all but obsolete Model-T began to move like a sixteen-cylinder racer.

"Give him credit," says Pop Warner, who has been coaching since 1895 and has turned out some of the best teams in history. "Shaughnessy has taken that T formation we used when I played at Cornell in 1892 and made it work as it has never worked before. This is because he has added his own ideas. There is no mystery about Shaughnessy's success at Stanford as I see it. The only mystery is where the ball is on some of those tricky plays of his."

Solving a Riddle

THERE is another mystery in Shaughnessy's career, however. Why did he quit a good teaching job at the University of Chicago for what looked like a bad job, and more football headaches, at Stanford? Shaughnessy was a member of the University of Chicago faculty, and he might have stayed there, snug in a professorship that paid him $10,000 a year.

"I couldn't have done that," Shaughnessy explains. "Football coaching is my hobby. I live it and I love it."

He has been kinder to the hobby than it has been to him. That hobby has given him a rough ride at times during a twenty-five-year coaching career that began in 1914, when he graduated from Minnesota with a record as a great tackle and fullback.

In 1919 Shaughnessy coached an unbeaten Tulane University eleven—only to be fired the next year!

Called back in a hurry when the Green Wave foundered under their new coach, Shaughnessy again got Tulane clicking and put together another unbeaten team in the 1925 season.

Then something happened that still gives Shaughnessy regrets whenever he hears the word "bowl" mentioned. His unbeaten 1925 Tulane team was invited to the Rose Bowl by the University of Washington. It was a dream come true for the struggling young coach. And it was rudely shattered when the Tulane authorities decided not to accept.

Bitterly disappointed, Shaughnessy quit Tulane and went to coach at Loyola University, just across the street in New Orleans.

At Loyola football material was meager, and Shaughnessy had to compete with something he himself had really started: the Sugar Bowl. It was Tulane's first stadium (though not known by that name then) and it was built on the strength of Shaughnessy's unbeaten 1925 team. Few believed that the

NEW FOODS FOR A NEW YEAR

How American science is opening new vistas for delicious recipes . . . using dried food products

by Helen E. Ridley

THERE is more to feeding our own army and navy or sending foodstuffs to Britain than just growing plenty of vegetables, grains, fruit and meat. In a great country like ours, we can produce all the food we want — and then some. The problem of transporting and storing it for the use of sailors at sea, soldiers in the field, or civilians in a country like England is something else again. Foodstuffs are bulky and often perishable. Merchant ships that used to have plenty of cargo space for food must now load up with implements of war. Supply trucks have their limitations as they follow an army shifting rapidly for maneuvers even in peacetime. And in the event of war, for which any army must always plan, the problem becomes just so much the more acute.

So it is war or the possibility of war that gives added importance to what, even in normal times, would be a revolutionary development — the advent for general use of foodstuffs in new, highly condensed forms. Many kinds of fruits, vegetables and soups are gradually being marketed in the shape of powders, flakes, compressed cakes and concentrates. Except for the liquid concentrates, they are dehydrated foods — inexpensive, compact, convenient, palatable and needing only the addition of water to be ready for use. They are not bulky — indeed, the manufacturers estimate that one pound of dehydrated food equals sixteen pounds in fresh form. A number of them are already on the market; others are being added practically every day.

Variety of Soups

TAKE soup, for example. The powdered varieties, at this writing, include pea, bean and vegetable mixtures. In flaked form there are cream of tomato, cream of corn, pea and bean soups.

Vegetables also are being prepared in dehydrated form. Add water and they puff up into substantial slices. Mushrooms and onions are taking this form, and so are vegetable combinations. All these are especially convenient to use in soup or molded salads.

Fruits are coming in several forms. There will be apricot nuggets and apricot powder, for instance. We used the powder in the frosting illustrated here. Cranberries come in flakes and are excellent when used in a cranberry sherbet or a cranberry chiffon pie, for both of which we give recipes. Lemon is available either in powder form or in a liquid concentrate.

Dried eggs are not entirely new — certainly not to our American bakers, nor to the manufacturers of various prepared cake flours. But there are new advances in the production of dried eggs. You can get whole eggs dried, yolks dried separately, or whites dried separately. The angel-food cake illustrating this article is witness to the use of dried egg whites. That is what we made the cake of. The dried whites can also be used very successfully for meringues, while the dried yolks make a splendid base for mayonnaise or Hollandaise sauce. In custards or other sauces you can use satisfactorily either dried whole eggs or dried yolks.

All the recipes that follow make use of one or more of these streamlined foods. Some varieties that we have mentioned are on the market now; others will be forthcoming. In fact, new ones are being produced so rapidly that it is impossible to forecast what will be on the market from week to week. But they are worth watching for.

Honey Angel-Food Cake

Egg white powder } to equal 8 egg whites
Water
¼ teaspoon salt
¾ teaspoon cream of tartar
½ cup strained honey
¾ cup sugar
¾ cup cake flour, sifted
½ teaspoon vanilla
Beat egg white powder, water and salt together until frothy. Add cream of tartar and beat until mixture will form moist peaks. Gradually beat in honey. Mix and sift sugar and flour and fold into mixture, sifting about ¼ at a time over the surface. Fold in vanilla: Turn into ungreased tube pan 10 inches in diameter, and bake in a moderate oven (325 degrees F.) 50-60 minutes. Invert pan until cake is cold, about 1 hour, before removing cake.

Apricot Seven-Minute Frosting

Egg white powder — to equal 2 whites
1½ cups sugar
2 tablespoons apricot powder
½ teaspoon lemon powder
¾ cup water

Combine all ingredients and beat until thoroughly blended. Continue beating over boiling water with rotary beater about 7 minutes, or until frosting holds its shape. Remove from heat, and continue beating until stiff enough to spread. Approximate yield: frosting for tops and sides of 2 (9-inch) layers or 2 dozen cup cakes.

Cranberry Sherbet

1 cup cranberry flakes
1½ cups sugar
Dash of salt
½ teaspoon lemon powder
3 cups water
Egg white powder } to equal 2 whites
Water

Mix cranberry flakes, sugar, salt and lemon powder. Add water and bring to boiling point, stirring constantly. Cool. Turn into freezing tray of automatic refrigerator and freeze until mushy. Combine egg white powder and water and beat until stiff. Fold egg whites into cranberry mixture and freeze until firm. Approximate yield: 1 quart.

Cranberry Chiffon Pie

1 envelope (1 tablespoon) unflavored gelatine
¼ cup cold water
¾ cup cranberry flakes
1 teaspoon lemon powder
¾ cup water
1 cup sugar
½ teaspoon salt
Egg yolk powder to equal 3 yolks
Egg white powder } to equal 3 whites
Water
1 pastry shell

Sprinkle gelatine on cold water. Combine cranberry flakes, lemon powder and water and cook over boiling water until the flakes are dissolved. Mix together ¾ cup of sugar, salt and egg yolk powder; combine with dissolved flakes and cook, stirring constantly until mixture thickens. Remove from heat, and add softened gelatine; stir until dissolved. Chill until syrupy. Mix egg white powder and water, beat until stiff; gradually beat in the remaining ¼ cup sugar; fold into gelatine mixture. Turn into baked pastry shell and chill until firm. When ready to serve, top with whipped cream if desired.

Molded Chicken and Vegetable Salad

½ cup dehydrated mixed soup vegetables
2½ cups water
1 envelope (1 tablespoon) unflavored gelatine
¼ cup water
1 cup diced cooked or canned chicken
¾ teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon Worcestershire Sauce
¼ cup mayonnaise

Soak soup vegetables in 2½ cups water for 1 hour, then simmer until soft. Sprinkle gelatine on ¼ cup water and add to cooked vegetable mixture. Stir until gelatine is dissolved. Add chicken, salt and Worcestershire sauce. Chill until syrupy. Fold in mayonnaise and chill until firm. Unmold on salad greens. Serve with additional mayonnaise. Approximate yield: 6 portions.

SIX MILLION NEW JOBS

traded in his coupe for a new sedan. Multiply him by a couple of million others and you see what's happening.

I saw the same thing from another angle when I visited Fort Dix, New Jersey, two months ago. None of the draft men were in camp yet — only a National Guard detachment was on hand. Nevertheless the population of near-by Wrightstown had already jumped from 300 to 600; two new retail stores had been opened up and two more were on the way. When you calculate the week-end business from friends who will visit the 14,000 men scheduled for this one camp, you begin to see that a flock of local people are going to get jobs out of the defense program even though they don't work on guns or shells or Army shoes.

Boom in Synthetics

ANOTHER facet of this defense boom is displayed by a new factory that has grown up in an erstwhile cornfield and has been surrounded by new homes for the families of 500 workmen. This is a plant producing nylon, the new synthetic silk — not very warlike at first blush, yet part of a twenty-five-year defense program to make us self-sufficient in vital war materials heretofore imported from abroad. Already there are a score of such plants producing not only synthetic silk but synthetic rubber, glass fiber, plastics, artificial leather, nitrates, camphor, optical glass, etc.

And that means all kinds of jobs. Naturally, skilled men get the first call, which is why we are already feeling an acute shortage of metalworkers in many industrial centers. But right on their heels come all the other occupations, for industry needs office boys as well as engineers. Perhaps the best summary of the situation is the United States Bureau of Labor's estimate that in war industries "about 35 per cent of the work required calls for skilled labor; 40 per cent is semi-skilled; 25 per cent is unskilled."

Altogether, between three and four million new workers will find jobs in industries directly or indirectly connected with the production of war materials. Some two million more will join the staffs of retail stores, service industries, furniture factories and the myriad other plants that cater to folks with pay checks to spend.

In the final analysis, however, the greatest opportunities exist in the secondary fields — the "second cousins" to the war babies. These secondary fields hire many more workers than the war industries proper, present milder training requirements, use a larger ratio of unskilled help — and are not yet flooded with applicants.

Promotions Due

THE present expansion of all forms of industry means good news for jobholders as well as job seekers. If you are already on the pay roll you should lose no time training yourself for promotion. Many of the choice positions are going to be filled by promoting workers already in the plants, so keep an eye out for any training programs your own company may launch.

In addition, the United States Office of Education is spending more than sixty million dollars to aid in the training process. About 500 vocational schools throughout the country are co-operating on this program and by next June half a million workers will be trained for the essential defense jobs.

There are four principal ways in which you may obtain this training:

1. If you are now unemployed or engaged on a WPA project, you may be selected from the register of the public employment service to take a "refresher" course or supplementary training in some field that will increase your usefulness in a defense job. This means that if you have not already registered with the nearest office of your state employment service, you should do so immediately. More than 90,000 workers have now been trained through these courses, and most of them have already been placed in private industry. Besides these, other thousands of employed workers have gone back to school to prepare themselves for better positions. They have enrolled with the endorsement of their employers and the representatives of

WALLY'S WAGON

Make Mine Soup

"WALLY," says Bushy Barnes, layin' aside this mornin's sports section. "Why can't this country be a little more reasonable?"

"What," I asks him, "suddenly convinced you it ain't — or ought to be?"

"The whole cockeyed nation is bowl-batty," Bushy goes on. "It's spreadin' through the country."

"You feel all right?" I want to know.

"Sure — but look at this list of football 'bowl' games, beginnin' back early in December an' lastin' as long as a New Year's resolution into 1941!"

"Pasadena's got a Rose Bowl. And then here's New Orleans with the Sugar Bowl an' Miami with the Orange Bowl. Dallas has got a Cotton Bowl. El Paso gets in its digs with the Sun Bowl."

"Douglas, in Arizona, uses a Copper one. Denver says it's a Tourist Bowl; but Miami takes seconds with a Health Bowl, only to have Denver come back with a double-header, the second one called the Celery Bowl. It's Pineapple Bowl in Hawaii, where you wouldn't think the disease would spread.

"An' the penitentiary at Raleigh, North Carolina, has a field called the Prison Bowl. And there's . . ."

"Wait a minute," I interrupt, "what you think ought to be done?"

"Oh, nothin', I guess," says Bushy. "As a matter of fact I'm just wondering how far the idea will spread. Now that football season's most over, it's about time for someone to promote a prize fight — and call it the Punch Bowl."

their local unions. This may be something for you to investigate.

2. With federal funds, engineering colleges and universities in many parts of the country are now organizing short courses for engineers to meet the shortage in specialized fields essential to national defense. The most important of these are aircraft, shipbuilding, and armaments. At least 30,000 more engineers will be needed.

3. If you live on a farm, you will be interested to know that the government has appropriated ten million dollars to provide training for rural youth in mechanical occupations common to the farm but also basic to the defense industries' needs.

4. The National Youth Administration is now expanding its program of production work projects for youth. More than 100,000 young people between the ages of seventeen and twenty-four will be helped through basic supplementary training necessary for private employment. The mechanical, metal, radio and electrical-shop fields will be included; also construction of public buildings, bridges and highways.

Such knowledge leads to better jobs, quicker promotion. "We had a lad who knocked around for months after getting out of high school without landing anything," a Public Trade School placement officer told me the other day. "Finally he enrolled in one of our trade-school defense classes last summer. By the time he'd finished, we had a job waiting for him at the Navy Yard."

"Incidentally," he added, "all but two students in that first class now have jobs!"

That's worth thinking about.

In fact, the whole story is worth thinking about because five to six billion for defense adds up to six million new jobs in virtually every field you can name. And six million new jobs cast a rosy hue over 1941!

The End

22,000-seater would ever be filled, but Tulane and its stadium rapidly mushroomed to fame and fortune, and Shaughnessy at little Loyola was obscured in the shadows of the Sugar Bowl he had helped to build.

Loyola was a rather small show window for Shaughnessy's coaching skill, but his ability began to be recognized, and offers of jobs, big and small, started rolling in. The University of California offered him the position of head football coach in 1931, but he refused; Navy Bill Ingram got the job. Next it was Wisconsin, trying to pick between Shaughnessy and Doc Spears. Shaughnessy decided to stick at Loyola. Then Huey Long tried to lure Shaughnessy over to Louisiana State. Shaughnessy wouldn't budge. He had married a New Orleans girl, and he wanted to stay in that city.

But finally, in 1933, the University of Chicago called on him to succeed Amos Alonzo Stagg. This chance to go to the Big Ten was too good to turn down. Shaughnessy went. Then bad luck hit him again. A campaign to de-emphasize football got under way at Chicago. The inducements that had lured players to the school were practically eliminated. Almost immediately the football material at Chicago started to run down like a clock that needed winding. Chicago University's football players got fewer, smaller and less experienced year by year. Their last Big Ten victory was over Wisconsin, 7-6, in 1936. After that one, despite Shaughnessy's herculean efforts, they lost fourteen football games in a row to their scornful Conference opponents before finally expiring altogether.

Shaughnessy never lost confidence in himself. He might have a losing team but he knew he had winning ideas. He knew because he tried these same ideas on the Chicago Bears, a professional team, in his spare moments. Whatever hours he could spare from the classrooms and the University practice field, he spent at the Bears' drills.

Owner-Coach George Halas of the Bears, himself one of the keenest men in football, recognized the merit of Shaughnessy's ideas, snapped them up; and where the weak material at the University of Chicago couldn't make Shaughnessy's system click, his Model T offense worked plenty for the Bears, whose attack became the most feared in the league.

And that explains the mystery of why Stanford called on him in the face of his unhappy 1939 record.

Nearly Spoiled the Show

BUT some of the Stanford alumni didn't know the whole story. To them Shaughnessy seemed just a losing coach, about as helpful to their losing Cardinal team as an anchor in a sinking rowboat. They were cold, even openly critical. Some of them decided that the best thing to do was to get rid of this coaching mistake quickly, and there are stories that a move was begun to sabotage the material, to discontinue the alumni scholarship of Pete Kmetovic, ace fullback.

Kmetovic stayed — and starred. And from the looks of things Shaughnessy will be staying at Stanford for a while, too. His only critics among the alumni now are those who didn't get Rose Bowl seats on the fifty-yard line.

Kmetovic isn't the only star on this 1940 Stanford team. For Shaughnessy has that magic spark that makes the most out of what material he has. Norm Standlee was just another fullback at Stanford last year. This season he has become the ripping, rampaging terror of the Coast, pronounced the equal of Texas A. and M.'s "Jarrin' John" Kimbrough by teams who have faced them both.

part of Melanie in Gone With the Wind. She went to Hollywood, and the make-up people took her in hand. They filled out her cheeks a little, pasted on some false eyelashes, hung some bangs over her forehead and shot the test. It was incredibly bad. They might just as well have shot Miss Scott.

She washed her face and combed her hair and went back to New York. But now she was on the Hollywood leash, which alternately shoos you away and jerks you back, and the air lanes scarcely had cooled after her frantic dash back to Broadway when Mr. Sol Lesser sent her an urgent wire to come out at once for a test for her original role of Emily in Our Town.

Recalling Melanie, Miss Scott started West with misgivings. It was a bumpy, stormy ride, and our heroine, very green about the gills, went to see Mr. Lesser straight from the airport. He received her cordially, but told her she might as well go back. Since wiring her, he explained, he had seen her screen test, the one for Melanie, and had decided that although she might be all right on the stage, she

Last year Frankie Albert was just another quarterback. Now, under Shaughnessy's tutelage, he is called Stanford's key man, the No. 1 "brain" player in the Pacific Coast Conference.

What is this Merlin touch that Shaughnessy possesses? "Moon" Mullins, one of the great Notre Dame fullbacks in Rockne's era, supplies a good clue:

"Rockne had a really good team in 1928, when Shaughnessy brought his little Loyola eleven up to South Bend to play us," Mullins recalls. "Knut used to love to run almost a hundred players on the field at warm-up practice before home games, to overawe the opposition. But Shaughnessy was too wise for that. He kept his players in the dressing room."

"Just before the whistle," Mullins goes on, "Rockne herded us into our own dressing room, which was right next to the one used by Loyola. He was going to give us that last pep talk before we went into action, and Rock was a real spellbinder. But for once — the only time I can recall — he couldn't get our attention. We were listening to Shaughnessy in the next room! He was keying his boys up, and every word he uttered seemed to burn through those walls. Man alive, but that Shaughnessy could talk. He had Rockne backed right off the boards!"

Little Loyola almost backed mighty Notre Dame off the gridiron that afternoon, too. It took a desperate fourth-down pass in the last minute of play to pull the Irish through, 12-6.

Had Shaughnessy's little team won that game, it would have been a miracle. But it would have been a minor miracle compared to what has happened to Shaughnessy in the last twelve months.

The End

wasn't, you know, the type for Hollywood.

This was too much. What, demanded Miss Scott witheringly, did a test for the part of Melanie have to do with a test for the part of Emily? She had created Emily on the stage, hadn't she? And she was all made up for that Melanie thing, all out of shape, bangs over her forehead and what not. How about another test?

Mr. Lesser stroked his chin. "Have you had any experience, at all, in Hollywood?" he asked.

"In a way, yes."

"What do you mean?"

Fully Prepared

Miss Scott hesitated. "Well, I was in a show at the Chicago Fair, and we were next door to Robert Ripley's Odditorium. We used to eat lunch with the exhibits. So while I've never really had any experience in Hollywood, I'm sure I could get used to it."

She got the test.

It is generally agreed that she did one of the outstanding jobs of the year in the screen version of Our Town.

While it was being filmed, Mr. Frank Lloyd, an independent producer, was looking for somebody to play opposite Cary Grant in The Howards of Virginia, a part that demanded something above the average in acting. He looked at a couple of rushes of Miss Scott in Our Town, then phoned Mr. Grant to come over. Mr. Grant did. From there on they were two men with but a single thought. And it was at Mr. Grant's request that she was given equal billing with him in the picture.

Which means precisely one thing: stardom.

After The Howards of Virginia, Mr. Lloyd signed her up for seven years, at a picture a year. And Mr. Lesser stuck in his oar and grabbed her for three more pictures. She is having her schoolteacher's certificate framed.

Miss Scott, by the way, is a descendant of Sir Walter Scott. This fact almost caused me to miss meeting her to discuss the writing of this article. I have been very bitter about Sir Walter ever since I had to learn a whole chapter of Ivanhoe by heart, as a reward for going fishing instead of to school. There was a picture of this eminent gent in the front of the book, and when I was told that Miss Scott was one of his descendants, I nearly went fishing again. I'm glad I didn't.

They may be relatives, but they don't look alike.

WHEN THE FIRST BABY COMES —

Here are suggestions for mothers planning a lovely new world

by Emily Post

Author of "Etiquette: The Blue Book of Social Usage," "The Personality of a House," Etc.

FOR this New Year's theme, it seems to me, I cannot choose better than to answer certain long-accumulated inquiries about welcoming a baby. One of the most appealing, as well as often repeated, questions is voiced by the mother-to-be of a first baby, who writes: "I want my baby's nursery to be lovely — won't you help me to plan it?"

The fundamental rules for planning a charming room for a baby are not at all difficult. The nursery should be simple in effect and easy to care for. Furnishings of dust-holding elaborateness, particularly in a sooty city, are to be avoided. The best kind of walls are washable ones. Furniture that can be wiped clean in a few minutes, curtains or ruffles or rugs that can be sent to the laundry or tubbed quickly at home — all these can be utterly charming; and they will make it much more possible to maintain the spick-and-span daintiness — as well as hygiene — that belongs to a baby.

As for the decoration of the room, that also should be simple. Violently exciting effects are not suitable for a tiny baby, and not good for an older one who begins to notice the surroundings. A design, shown me a while ago by a reader of this column, displayed a child's room violently decorated with large pictures of exciting animals in red, blue, yellow, violet, green, purple, black and white. There was an infuriated Donald Duck, a timid Pluto the Pup, a frightening big bad wolf, and a menacing bear. Not an animal looked friendly. My advice was: "Oh, please, No!"

Tranquil Atmosphere

HOME surroundings for babies, as well as for the rest of us, should first of all be tranquil. And the fundamental rule in designing a room for any child is that it should not be too exciting or too cluttered with toys. Above all, it should contain nothing that could possibly be frightening.

In connection with both the furnishing of the baby's room and the choice of the little bows, sacks, blankets and knitted things, the question of color always arises. One reader prefers to have the bassinet, as well as the papering of the room, done in pink rather than blue — although she hopes for a boy. It seems to me more sensible to choose the color you like, rather than to choose the one you do not like — and then perhaps have it turn out wrong, after all!

As a matter of fact, I must acknowledge to having a weakness for very young babies in pink, because until they turn out to be golden blondes — if they ever do — pink naturally lends a rosy glow to all babies, whereas blue sometimes makes the babies who have dark hair and pale skins look ill.

And now to consider the announcements of the baby's arrival. Just about as soon as the stork has made a safe and happy landing, the news is, of course, telephoned to the immediate family and the few most intimate friends who live nearby, and it is telegraphed to those at a distance.

These first few messages are, in countless cases, followed by announcements sent to all the friends of the parents. Usually these announcements consist of a very small card which gives the baby's name and date of arrival and which is tied with a very small bow of white ribbon to the top of the mother's own visiting card. Though it is the accepted convention to send the mother's card alone, yet in my opinion, it seems more accurate, as well as fairer, to choose the double card of the baby's father and mother. The parents' cards can all be ready beforehand, with the envelopes addressed and stamped. Then, when the baby comes, it is only necessary to telephone the stationer, giving him the name and the date; and the baby's card can be finished within a few hours, put into the waiting envelopes and posted. If a mother prefers greeting-card announcements rather than the formal engraved cards, there are many lovely ones to choose from. On these the baby's name and the date of his birth can be written by hand.

of the services, and sit in the back of the church, and those who are interested in the christening remain.

Unless forbidden by your own denomination, the house christening is in many ways easier, and safer. It is easier, because the baby does not have to have wraps put on and taken off; safer, because the baby is not liable to catch cold. Moreover, a baby brought from another room without any fussing is generally "good."

The arrangements for a house christening are very simple. A suitable side of the room is chosen for a background. In front of this you place a small high table, and on it a cover of any suitable material. Avoid white

Arrangements for the christening must, of course, be made first with the clergyman. If it is to take place at the conclusion of the morning service, the family and very intimate friends are invited by note or by telephoned message. A typical note reads:

Dear Lucy:

The baby is to be christened next Sunday after morning service. We hope that you will come to our house immediately after church.

Affectionately,
Alice

If the christening takes place in church, the baby and the parents arrive at the close damask, because it is apt to suggest a table in a restaurant rather than an altar. Then make a flat circle or mat of flowers or leaves, and in the center of this place the loveliest bowl you have.

Usually there are two godmothers for a girl and one godfather. A boy has two godfathers and one godmother.

If the clergyman is to wear vestments, a room must be put at his disposal.

The Ceremony

AT THE hour set for the ceremony, the baby's parents go in, and stand at one side, conveniently near the christening table. When the clergyman enters the room to take his place at the font, the guests naturally make way, forming an open aisle. Then the godmother, with the baby in her arms, follows the clergyman; the other two godparents walk behind her, and all three stand at the font. At the proper moment, the clergyman takes the baby, baptizes it and hands it back to the godmother, who holds it until the ceremony is over.

After the ceremony, the guests, of course, stay and drink a small glass of caudle — a drink made of milk, barley, egg yolks, sugar, cream and sherry — and eat a piece of cake or a sandwich as a pledge of friendship to the baby.

As for christening presents for the baby, no one is supposed to give any except the godparents, who give the nicest presents they can. Usually the mother is consulted about these, so that the presents will be things the baby really needs.

A stork shower is usually given by the friends of the mother sometimes before, but very often after, the arrival of the baby. The presents given at this time are very simple and the rules are the same as for any other shower. Of course, if the shower is given beforehand, her friends give her their presents then. If there is no shower, they take her something when they first go to see the baby.

with outward calm... but it was noted that he jumped if anybody even remarked that it was raining cats and dogs. Lynn was very satisfied with the way things were going. She was still very angry with him for his know-it-all attitude, but George was taking care of that. She was proud of George, and fed him top milk to keep up his strength for the Autumn Field Trials. She had everything planned nicely. The Trials would be the grand climax at which George would prove that Hoby didn't know anything about bird dogs. Hoby would have to admit he had been caught bluffing. Hoby would — as he had promised — apologize humbly and ask to be friends once more.

But Hoby was not admitting anything yet. Four days before the Trials, he reinforced his picket fence with chicken wire. He borrowed two cats and, protected from George by the new fence, gave his setters an intensive course in disregarding cats. Lynn almost pitied him.

On the morning of the Trials she packed a lunch of chicken sandwiches, and took along several extra pieces to reward George after he finished debunking Hoby's reputation. Hoby spotted them as soon as they arrived at the scene of the Trials. He walked toward them. George saw him coming, and hid behind a bush.

"Go on, hide," Hoby said. "You're nothing but a rat in a fur coat." He turned to Lynn. "I still say I'm going to win," he stated. "So I'm glad you brought your cat. I'm glad all your friends brought their cats."

She gasped, "What cats?"

"Look."

SHE looked. A Manx cat was perched in a nearby tree. An Angora crouched under a parked car, glaring at the dogs and sizzling like a squib firecracker. An alley cat was warily approaching George.

One of Lynn's friends called, "We brought our cats in case you might have forgotten yours, Lynn." Another friend crept up behind Hoby, and mewed. Somebody snickered, "Are you all ready to go mousing, Hoby?"

Hoby reddened and stalked back to his dogs. Lynn looked at the grinning spectators. Her temper began coming to a boil. Probably Hoby could win the Field Trials if George weren't around. She wanted to get even with him, but she resented other people trying to do the same thing.

She watched the judges assign fields to the various dogs. Hoby started leading his setters toward the fields assigned to him. Lynn realized he would have to pass right by George and the other cats. George had already seen Hermit and Bachelor. His tail twitched around and around, as if he were winding himself up. Lynn made a quick decision. She unwrapped the chicken she had brought for George, showed it to him and then tossed it near the other three cats. They swarmed over the tidbits like linemen going after a fumble.

George seemed anguished. He looked from his playmates, the setters, to his intended meal, the chicken; and then back again. It was hard to resist the appeal of a romp with the setters. They were pretending not to see him, but their throats were quivering with stored-up, joyful barks. On the other hand, it was hard to see his chicken disappearing. George made his choice. The twitching migrated from his tail to his nose. He leaped at the other cats. Lynn sighed and relaxed. Hoby, who was staring grimly straight ahead, hadn't seen her toss out the chicken. Now he was swaggering on like a small boy who has just walked past a dark cemetery on a dare. He thought his training had finally cured his dogs of George.

Meanwhile George finished all the chicken he could get and all the cats who would remain to fight, and decided to join the setters. Lynn hastily collected all the chicken from her sandwiches and trailed George. Throughout the morning, whenever George prepared to ambush the setters, Lynn fed him chicken. The two young setters had no distractions. They were all over the fields, pointing and flushing quail. Lynn had never seen them work so well. She wondered if they were trying to show George they didn't care.

She ran out of chicken and George ran out of storage space at the same time. George tottered back to her car, sagging in the middle like a feather mattress, and went to sleep. Lynn felt a kind of sad pride as she munched her empty sandwiches. Hoby was going to win the Field Trials without realizing how she had helped him. In the future she would be about as welcome in his scheme of things as a charley horse.

LATE in the afternoon the Trials ended, and Hoby collected another championship. Lynn drove away. George continued to sleep until they arrived home. Then he followed her to the porch and began prowling restlessly. He was the first one to see Hoby and the two dogs turn into the front walk. He slipped into hiding among the shrubbery. Hoby came to the porch and said, "I just wanted to make sure you knew I won."

She murmured humbly, "I'm glad."

"Glad? Why, you and that furbearing yowl you call a cat did your best to make me lose. It just goes to prove," he said, "that you can't show up a person who isn't bluffing."

"Yes, Hoby."

He scuffled around on the steps. "Well," he mumbled, "now that I know all about training bird dogs, I think I'll take up bob-sled racing in my spare time. The two-man bob events." He paused, and Lynn hoped wildly that he might be leading up to something. But he said, at last, "I'll have to find a good man to ride bow. Well, I'll be getting along."

He started down the walk. Then he froze into a creditable imitation of a setter on point. George, Hermit and Bachelor had flushed a grasshopper on the front lawn. They were tumbling all over each other trying to catch it. Hoby swiveled around and glared at Lynn.

"It isn't my fault," she cried. "If I'd only known you were stopping by with the dogs I'd have had some more chicken ready for dear George."

His eyes widened. "Chicken! I wondered what had become of George and those other cats. You kept them away with chicken."

"I — I didn't think it was fair for people to laugh at you."

"It looks," he mumbled, "as if I don't know much about bird dogs after all."

"Of course you do. But nobody knows more about dogs than George."

"You know what?" he said earnestly. "That was a darn nice thing for you to do today. Maybe you don't know much about sports, but you know a lot more than I seem to about sportsmanship. Uh, I've been thinking about this bob-sled business. You're a little light for bow man but would you like to try it with me?"

SHE nodded happily. They sat down on the steps to discuss bobbing on turns and when to set the ice brake and how to increase speed by heating the sled runners — and Lynn managed to restrain every urge to talk like a bob-sled expert. As they chatted, George wearied of the grasshopper, which was ready to be traded in for a new model by now, anyway. He strolled toward them.

Hoby said, "You'd better not come around me, George. That tail of yours is just what I need to clean a couple of shotgun barrels."

George was not impressed. He climbed up to Hoby, waving his tail like a fringed parasol. He rubbed against one of Hoby's big hands. Hoby scowled, but almost unconsciously his hand strayed back and scratched under George's chin. "He feels sort of nice under your fingers, doesn't he?"

Lynn agreed. Happiness bubbled inside her like champagne. George had just caught Hoby in a bluff he had been getting away with all his life. Hoby wasn't made of leather and brambles after all. Nobody had found that out before now, because nobody had ever dared to walk right up to him and demand affection. It was a valuable hint for her.

SPORTS ARE BEAUTIFIERS

And city women have many to choose from

by Sylvia Blythe

THE girl who adopts a sport as a hobby has the odds in her favor in her race with other girls to win good looks. Exercise, in this pleasant disguise, is something she is going to stick to, because she gets fun out of it. When she excels at her sport, her self-esteem goes up, she always has an ace-in-the-hole for conversation, and her doors swing open to new worlds of interest.

Even if you are a city-dweller, your parks, playgrounds, women's clubs and gymnasiums give you the same natural advantages in sports that your suburban friends enjoy. In the long list of feminine sports from which you can choose there is one for every season, climate, taste, age and need. In choosing yours, you can even size up its particular benefits, and make sure it satisfies a definite beautifying aim.

To make that easier for you, I have induced some physical-education experts to interpret certain popular sports in terms of these beauty benefits.

"Before you plunge into a new physical activity," they warn, "it is wise to get your doctor's approval. Then break into your game or sport slowly, so as to condition yourself gradually. Learn the fundamentals from an expert, if you can. Getting those right allows you to go on, on your own, and makes progress more rapid."

Ice Skating

FIRST, let's see what benefits you can get from ice skating, a sport that has whirled into favor all over the country, and draws young and old to frozen lakes and ponds and artificially iced rinks. Because you glide with both the skating leg and the free leg flexed at the knee, and move your body with smooth, rhythmic springs and dips, leg muscles get the same exercises they would from knee-deep bends. That's why thighs and hips become slim and lithe. Because feet turn in dexterous maneuvers, ankles become strong, slim and supple. In speed skating, you usually hold your hands behind you, which forces you to square your shoulders, swell out your chest, and straighten up your spine.

When Spring thaws out the icy pond or rink, you can buckle up your feet in roller skates, thus continuing your fun and beautifying activity all through the year.

If you live in the cold climates where ski slopes rise in city parks or where snow trains can take you to nearby hills, consider skiing. This is one of the finest poise and posture builders on the list of sports. To balance yourself on skis, you must keep your body straight from the lower back all the way to the shoulders. This uprightness, propelled by free-moving arms and legs, develops an elastic bearing, limberness and good co-ordination of muscles. What brace-weight take alarm. The energy used in bowling will burn up fat and replace it with tight, flexible muscles at the waistline, abdomen and hips. To do a good job of reducing via the bowling alley, however, keep a strict watch also on the diet.

If you are casting around for a mild sport, take golf, a game that you can tackle at any age and play eight months out of the year even in cold climates. Like walking, golf is one of the best all-round activities from the standpoint of health, and is one of the most pleasant ways to take exercise, sun and fresh air and to plant your heels in cool, green earth. It will help you control the needle on the bathroom scale, will relax you and will send you off to bed for sounder slumbers.

Swimming

SWIMMING, steady and unspectacular sport, loved by millions, is fun all the year round—in heated pools during the winter, bracing surf or village creek, or wherever you find it, in the warmer days. It offers the combined benefits of all other sports and it gives you the easiest and most natural of all exercise. Swim often and you will build long, smooth, symmetrical muscles, strip off surplus fat. You will also acquire grace and posture such as you can never get on land. Its most spectacular benefit shows in chest development, a building up of pectoral muscles underlying the breast, best achieved through the back stroke.

On the tennis, squash or badminton court you can build grace, speed, strong, up-pulling muscles, good physical stamina and a lithe, well-knit figure in a competitive game that exhilarates, puts you on your mettle and, at the same time, teaches you good sportsmanship.

Yours for the taking and for only a small outlay for class instruction is fencing, the kingly art of advance and defense with the foils. Though you must work long and patiently at study and practice, there is no activity which will better reward you for your time and effort. Expertness with the foils gives you poise, bearing, grace, speed, nimbleness of foot, synchronized motion, alertness of mind and eye, and finally self-confidence that comes from knowing that you possess these qualities. It melts off surplus fat, develops the bust and shoulders and gives you energy of a rare, magnetic kind that has few equals as an asset of personality.

The general nodded in agreement. "No, I have no message for him," Martin said.

The general nodded again. "Then you may go," he told him. He did not see Meng-an again. When he reached his tent six men were waiting. When they saw him they saluted. "We are to go with you into the hills," they said.

By some means they had with them the few tools he needed—pickaxes, buckets for rock fragments, materials for mapping, and rolls of bedding.

"At once?" he asked. "It is so ordered," they replied. "But I must see someone before I go," he protested.

"We will wait a few minutes," a soldier said. "The general does not like delay." No, he would not, Martin knew, thinking of that firm young figure.

At the door of the women's barracks he asked the girl soldier on guard for Siu-li, and was told to wait.

She came a few moments later and quickly he told her his orders. "And you?" he asked.

"I am to go into training, merely."

"And Meng-an?" he asked, wanting only to hear of her and knowing very well that he knew more than Siu-li did. "I have not seen her," Siu-li replied.

He knew he should tell nothing he had been told, and yet he wanted some communication with that small creature slipping her lonely way among the enemy. He said in a low voice, too low for the guard to hear:

"If you see her today, tell her I said to take care of herself as she goes." And then, when he saw the astonishment in Siu-li's eyes, he added quickly, "She is more valuable than you know—to the cause, I mean."

But Siu-li was shrewd with the shrewdness of a woman. "I was about to ask you, now that we are here, if you regret coming, but I think I need not," she said.

He laughed sheepishly, feeling himself grow red. "No, you need not," he agreed. "I am not sorry."

WEEKS passed him, and he spent them day upon day in searching the barren hills. They were not barren, he was beginning to discover. Under their sandy, tawny surfaces there was a rock, and in the seams of the rock minerals. He walked up the steep beds of mountain streams, his eyes upon every glint and glitter. The men with him were well chosen, for they were men who belonged to the hills, who had spent their youth washing the streams for silver.

"But is there iron?" he asked them as he asked the hills themselves.

"That we don't know, for we never looked for it when there was silver," they said.

They led him to shallow pits they had dug. These he tapped and examined and tested the fragments he chose. There was silver everywhere, but he could not find iron.

"We may have to make our bullets of silver," he thought grimly.

The strange hills surrounded him, and silence was their atmosphere. There seemed no life in them, and yet sometimes he came upon a monastery built out of sandy rock and seeming in its shape and color so like a cliff that only a gate told the difference. Inside the priests lived, silent so long that they could scarcely speak when he addressed them, men whom the mountain winds had dried and beaten upon and bleached until they too were sand-colored. Yet every one of them, when told of his task, was eager to help him and to show him certain dark ledges they had seen. Everyone knew that they had an enemy.

EVERYWHERE they knew. In the night under the endlessly clear skies and beneath the sharp stars he thought of those who were farmers by day and soldiers by night, and of his sister, who had been so tenderly reared, now learning to march long hours and to fire a gun; most of all and longest, he thought of Meng-an, making her lonely way in and out through the enemy lines.

"She has the hardest and most dangerous work of us all," he thought. When he thought of this his bitterness against his father heaped itself up with gall. "He betrays everyone of us," he thought. The filial piety he had been taught he put from him forever—that ancient teaching which had tied together the generations of his people.

"I am no more his son," he thought. "We must build a new country, and every generation must be its own lawmaker."

"There is no iron," he told the general later.

"There must be," the general said. "Go back."

The hills were bitterly cold now with autumn. The foolish silver was rich everywhere. But the hills held nothing more. He had stayed a month, and then the cold rain had driven him down from the summit. It had seemed he must make report of having found nothing. He knew, too—the long silent nights and the hot noons had told him—that he longed to see Meng-an. Had she come and gone safely? He must know, or thought he must. And so he had come down.

He had gone at once to Siu-li. But Siu-li was not there. She had been sent the day before with her regiment to a village to the east to make forays by night against an enemy garrison. He was sick with alarm when he heard it, and then dismayed because since she was gone there was no one he could ask about Meng-an. Everyone went about his business here, and it was no one's business to speak of Meng-an. And he had had to go then to the general.

"Go back," the general said now. Against his look there was no hope of refusal. Besides, how could he say, "I cannot, until I have seen a certain woman." How could he even say, "I must hear first if Meng-an is safe?"

The general saw his hesitation. "We are still at war," he said; "why do you delay?"

"I do not," Martin said doggedly. He went back that same day.

He had lived in the hills so long now that when he thought of cities and of people they were words and nothing more. Had he once seen ships and trains and traveled upon them? Even his memories of them were gone.

He had for companions these men as dogged as himself, and for his strength his own determination that if there were iron in these hills he would find it. And if he had needed a spur to prod him he had it.

One day, when in an October as cold as winter where he was, he sat on a rock near a summit eating his bread and salt fish, at noon, he saw even there an airplane. It flew well above the mountain top, and yet close enough for him to see it. It was an enemy plane! He could see its markings clearly above him as he looked up at it. It sank a little as though it saw him, then rose and sped on. An enemy plane over these far, inner mountains! He swallowed his food quickly and called his men. They were eating fifty feet below him in a shallow valley. He had climbed out of it to see the hills while he ate.

"Come on!" he cried, and when they were come: "We must make haste if the enemy has flown as far as this."

They had worked longer after that, and every day they searched the skies. There were no planes for ten days more, and then eleven planes flew over them like wild geese.

That was the day he found iron. He found it early in the morning, low, near the base of the peak upon which he had spent uselessly nearly fifteen days. He had gone too high. The iron was old, and aeons had driven the deposits deep into the bowels of the mountains. "Have I been looking too high, everywhere?" he asked himself.

He was so excited by this possible thing that he went no higher. He covered half the base of the mountain by noon, and in seven places he found signs of iron, whether it was seven different places, or all one great rich vein he did not know. But when he sat down at noon, he ate his bread in such excitement that he could scarcely swallow. Then it was that he heard the planes and, looking up, saw their gooselike passage. The sight might only yesterday have filled him with despair. But today he shook his fist at them, and shouted: "We have our bullets for you!"

Now he could go back with good news. He was even glad that he had found iron in autumn instead of spring. Soon it would be too cold for the enemy planes to fly over the inland areas, and during the winter months the mines could be planned and made ready.

He had long talks about machinery with his men. When he thought of machinery for mines he was troubled. How could they construct and haul and place those great masses? But these men had been miners without such aid. Bamboo and ropes and wooden buckets were their tools, and Martin listened to them. "A little more than they have had and it will be much," he thought as they went on.

EVERYWHERE through the countryside there were signs of autumn. The harvests were good, and the farmers grew bold to reap them, because few airplanes came now to bomb.

"In the summer we spend half the day in our bomb huts," they told Martin. "Well, it's cool there!" they said, grinning with mischief. "Well, we have had bandits of many kinds," another said. Wherever he went there was no talk of hardship or surrender. "I wish my father could be here," he thought. "If he saw these people, could he still betray them?"

The thought of his father was like a sore in his heart. Whatever he did, he thought, it would not be enough to atone for his father. And when he thought of Meng-an, he asked himself what right he had, the son of a traitor, to think of her.

In this mood he walked the miles back to the encampment, and without asking for his sister or Meng-an he went, dusty as he was, to report to the general. In his hand he carried the fragments of rock. He laid them on the table.

"I have found iron," he said simply, "and plenty of it."

Rhymes About Town

MORNING AFTER

And now the gifts pour back again —
The ties that didn't suit the men,
The gloves, pajamas, slippers, and socks,
The mules, and gowns, and artists' smocks
That didn't fit. And how abhorrent
The stores must find this teeming torrent
Of customers with this year's crop
Of presents to return or swap.

Poor merchant, you have got to grin,
Although no money's coming in.
My bosom throbs with sympathy . . .
And now, please change this skirt for me.

The general took up the rocks. "Better than gold," he said. And then when he had examined them he looked up at Martin. "When can you go back?" he asked.

"Today, if you bid me."

But the general laughed. "Now you are taught," he said. "It is the answer I wanted. But you shall not go today. We must make our plans."

"There is not much time before winter comes down," Martin said doggedly.

"Not much, but a day or two," the general said, "and that is long enough for everything. I have news for you. Do you remember my little spy?"

"Meng-an?" Her name flew out of Martin's mouth like a bird from a cage.

THE general nodded. "How did you know her name?" he asked, surprised. "She brought my sister and me here."

"Do you have a sister?" the general demanded of him. "And if you have, why did you not tell me?"

"There was no need," Martin said. But the general struck a bell on his table. "She must come here, too. This news is for both of your father's children."

A soldier appeared. "Go and fetch — what is her name?"

"Siu-li — of the Third Regiment."

"Surname Liu, name Siu-li, of the Third Regiment," the general ordered. "And tell Meng-an to come."

"So!" the soldier cried as he had been taught. Saluting, he hurried off.

At the mention of his father Martin was afraid. What would the general call good news except that a traitor had been killed? If this was the news, he must warn Siu-li first. They must show no grief. He thought quickly. "Sir," he asked, "may I speak first with my sister? If something has befallen our father, it will be better to prepare her for it."

"Nothing has befallen him," the general replied. He was turning the fragments of rocks over in his hands, dreaming of the precious stuff they held.

So there was nothing to do except to wait.

"Sit down," the general said and Martin sat down. It was very hard to wait. The general was looking at the rock now through a small hand microscope.

Then in a while they heard the light quick tread of feet trained to march, the feet of girl soldiers. The general put down his microscope and looked up. The door curtains opened. Two straight slender girls in uniform stood there. They saluted and stood at attention, Meng-an and Siu-li. Martin smiled at Siu-li and looked at Meng-an. His heart rose on a great wave of pride. These two girls in former days would have been sheltered, helpless creatures behind a courtyard wall; Siu-li even a few months ago had been useless.

"Is this your sister?" the general asked of Martin, but gazing at Siu-li. "It is she," Martin said, rising.

"Be at ease, all of you," the general said. He seemed to have forgotten why he had called Meng-an here. "Be seated," he told Siu-li, without taking his eyes from her face. "I have not seen you before," he said.

Siu-li blushed a little. The uniform, her straight-cut hair, the pistol at her belt, her feet in hard leather shoes, none of these could hide what she was: a soft-eyed girl. Those large soft eyes she now turned upon the young general, as full of coquetry as though she wore a silk robe and had

"Mr. Finch, you must stop calling them war chests!"

jewels in her hair. "I did not know you wished it," she said demurely. "But I do," the general said.

Meng-an looked at Martin. In her eyes he saw that flickering — it was laughter, surely. He smiled to answer it. It was pleasant to communicate thus with her over those other two. Then Meng-an coughed a small dry cough and the general glanced at her and remembered.

"Ah, you also," he said, but his voice was very different to her. "Yes, and now repeat what you told me. Who told you that the enemy is about to march southward and how we can surprise that march?"

"Wang Ting," Meng-an replied. "Wang-Ting!" Siu-li cried. "But he is my father's secretary!"

Meng-an did not turn her head. She continued to make report, her eyes upon the general's face. "He is sent by his master. Of himself he knows nothing, but his master is in a position to know much and will be as long as his life is spared by the enemy. If they find out, he will die. But until that time, I go to a certain small teashop and there I can be told." All this Meng-an said in her even voice, as though what she said were nothing.

"If I had known there was also you," the general said to Siu-li as though she were the only one in the room, "I would have told you at once what your father was. He has been for us since the city fell. Why do you think this little spy comes and goes except to bring me news from him?"

Now Siu-li turned upon Meng-an. "And you did not tell me!"

"How did I know what you thought of your father?" Meng-an retorted. "And I have my orders against talk about him with anyone," she added.

"And you," the general said to Martin, "you I wanted to try, to see if you were fit to be your father's son. When you did not give up until you found the iron, I said, 'He is fit.'"

"You knew I doubted my father?" "Your father begged me in a letter to tell you what he was, when I saw the time was right," the general replied.

They sat, these impetuous two, the modern son and daughter of an old Confucian scholar, and humbled themselves in their knowledge. Then suddenly Siu-li began to weep. She turned to Martin.

"We — we were very unjust!" she whispered.

"Yes," Martin said in a daze. "Yes, we were." He thought of his fine father in the midst of the comings and goings of the enemy in his house, holding his life as lightly as a toy in his hands, and he cleared his throat. "I wish we could tell him so," he said.

BUSY SIGNAL

whole thing tremendously, and advising Tichner: "Take it easy, now, me foin laddy-buck. Shure, the Sar-geant will be back any moment now —"

As for me, I just broke out in a fine sweat of excitement, and waited for Niels.

He came in grinning. "Nice work, Mike," he said. "I thought he'd make a break for it. That's the trouble with a phony alibi; you get to leaning on it, and when it is ripped away, the old morale's shot completely. Right, Tichner?"

Not "Mr. Tichner" any more, I noted.

"You're crazy!" flared Tichner. "If you think —"

"Sh-h-h-h!" interrupted Niels. "Let me talk now. You had your chance. I want to tell you a little story."

"Miss Tower phoned you, right enough, but not just before midnight. Much earlier than that. She insisted on seeing you, immediately. You came over, carefully avoiding being seen. After all, you couldn't afford to have your past interfere with your future — as the husband of the heiress to the Kindred money."

"It was probably a pretty stormy session. Miss Tower was the emotional, dramatic type, I gather. You both became angry. She kept threatening to upset your applecart, and finally you forgot yourself completely. You killed her."

"Then something reminded you that Mr. Weston was to call you at midnight. Perhaps the clock struck

"I will tell him," Meng-an said calmly.

"Don't cry!" the general said suddenly to Siu-li. She looked at him, her great eyes dewy with tears and very beautiful.

"How can I help it?" she said piteously. "I have been a wicked daughter. I ought to have known my father couldn't — be what we thought he was!"

"I say you are not to weep any more!" the general shouted. "I cannot bear it," he added in a gentler voice.

AND then Martin felt his own eyes caught by someone's gaze, and looked up and there were Meng-an's eyes, holding his, and this time it was as though their hands clasped. And suddenly his heart inquired, "Is there any reason now?" and then answered itself, "There is no reason."

"Now this is all settled," the general said hastily, "and it is time we went back to our work." His eyes took leave of Siu-li's soft black ones, though unwillingly. "Let us proceed," he said sharply. "Soldiers, attention!"

Martin rose, Siu-li and Meng-an leaped to their feet, saluted, wheeled and marched out.

The general stared after them and sighed. Then he smiled at Martin. "You are in love with that little spy of mine," he said.

"How — who —" Martin stammered.

"Ah, I saw it," the general said calmly. "Well, why not? Everything must go on the same in wartime. Well, you may have my little spy. Tell her so. But she must go on working. We must all go on working."

"Yes, sir," Martin said, dazed with the general's calmness over the most enormous thing in the world.

Then, even as he looked at the general, he saw a strange thing happening. Over that firm stern young face he saw a soft sheepish smile appear, that turned the general at once into an ordinary young man such as may be seen any spring day in any country. "Your sister has very fine eyes," he said abruptly.

"They have been so considered." The general looked startled. "I suppose so," he said unwillingly. He reflected a moment, still staring at Martin without seeing him.

"Why not?" he demanded after a moment.

"Why not, indeed?" Martin replied. "As you said, sir, even in war everything must go on as usual."

They looked at each other for the least part of a moment longer, and then they suddenly laughed, and then, sharing this laughter in their youth like a cup of wine between them, they laughed again for pure pleasure.

HERE'S a wonderful gift for you if you accept membership in the Literary Guild now—one of the newest and most absorbing books of the season—Howard Spring's long novel, "Fame Is the Spur."

Remember "My Son, My Son"? In that book Howard Spring gave us one of the best-loved stories of our time. And as a moving-picture it was a sensational success. This new book has an even more interesting story—the story of the rise of Hamer Shawcross, product of Manchester slums, to the position of Minister of His Majesty's Government, a suave and potent national figure. Hamer placed his wit and strength and handsome presence behind an ideal, made a lost cause his own, and proved that even in a world run by wealth and power a poor boy's dream could come true. Hamer was born to lead: his voice was magic, a trumpet commanding men upon a new crusade. Hamer was born to be loved; women were drawn to him by the fascination of his presence. His lovely wife, his mother, his boyhood friends, the peeress he defied, all are a part of his life's pattern and the pattern of this magnificently unfolded story. Here also you will find the cavalcade of recent English history, the first World War, the Coronation, the promises of the twenties and the feverish hopes and fears of the thirties.

Critics have already heaped extravagant praise on "Fame Is the Spur"—already this book is the subject of conversation wherever up-to-date book readers get together. Here is a marvelous opportunity to get this $2.75 value FREE, together with free membership in the Literary Guild of America. Read the advantages of membership outlined below, then mail the coupon.

Why THE LITERARY GUILD Offers You This New Book FREE

THE principal reason is to encourage immediate acceptance of our offer of free membership in the Guild so that we can demonstrate the extraordinary book values which you get as a Guild Member. "Fame Is the Spur" is a typical Guild book selection. When you realize that you will have the privilege of getting many such important new $2.50 to $5.00 books, fiction or non-fiction, whenever you want them, for only $2.00—we feel that you are practically sure to join the Guild at once.

How You Save Up to 50%

The Literary Guild selects for you each month an outstanding new book from the forthcoming lists of the leading publishers. Although the publishers' editions sell for from $2.50 to $5.00, if bought individually at retail, Guild members pay only $2.00 for these same books, in handsome Guild editions. Guild selections are delivered to members, on approval, the same day the publisher's edition is placed on sale.

Magazine "Wings" Free

Guild members receive free the famous Guild magazine "Wings," which contains articles about the current selection and its author, and includes a special contribution by the author. It is profusely illustrated. "Wings" is also an invaluable guide to all important current reading, for each month it reviews about 30 new books, any of which may be purchased through the Guild at the established retail prices.

"Wings" also contains an advance description of the books to be selected the following month. If you feel you do not want that book, merely notify the Guild not to send it when the time comes. On the other hand, if the selection sounds interesting, you may have it sent for your approval. Guild members are not required to purchase a book every month. As few as four selections within one year keeps your membership in force.

NEW BONUS PLAN Offers 25% Further Saving

As soon as you have purchased four selections you are entitled to another free book because the new plan gives members a $2.50 to $5.00 Bonus Book as soon as four Guild selections have been purchased at only $2.00 each.
